FROM MYSTERIOUS VIP CUSTOMERS, to ranking in the top 50 of Parisian restaurants, to eating cupcakes with a spoon, life as a baker in Paris has been one grand adventure for Bobbie (Parsons) Maker, M.A. ’07.

Originally from Newfoundland, Canada, Maker came to UNI for her master’s in education. “We were part of a pilot program; there were seven of us living in Grundy Center and teaching in the schools, driving to UNI in the evening for classes,” Maker said. “The faculty at UNI and the community members of Grundy Center were so supportive and accommodating for us!”

Shortly after getting married, Maker’s husband, Ray, was offered a job in Paris. The couple was excited to throw caution to the winds and move to France, although it meant Maker had to give up her teaching job plus the baking business she had developed on the side, providing custom cakes and cupcakes for friends’ parties.

“The problem was, when we decided to move to Paris, I didn’t have any friends here. There were certainly no friends of friends calling me now for custom cake orders. So I was at a loss of what to do,” Maker said. But by combining her passion for baking with her hard-working entrepreneurial spirit, she decided that the Parisians could use a little cupcake love in their lives.

She chose to open her own cupcake shop, despite the language barrier (“bonjour” was the extent of Maker’s French in the beginning); the government paperwork; and the challenge of finding (and then renovating) just the right location.

Two years after opening, Bertie’s CupCakery is a picture-perfect shop tucked away on the Île de la Cité, only a block from Notre Dame. Reviews on TripAdvisor are glowing, placing her in the top 50 of Parisian restaurants (out of 12,443) and bringing a steady stream of visitors. For a shining moment in 2013, the shop was ranked third on the site. Maker was giddy with excitement.

“Cupcakes in Paris are actually considered quite fashionable,” Maker said, “However, there is a bit of a lack of cupcake knowledge. We get a lot of ‘first-timers’ – they’ve never eaten a cupcake before and want to know what it is and how to eat it! I have subsequently had to start providing spoons, as a lot of French customers are not as inclined to touch their food."

Her most mysterious order came when they got a call one morning, requesting permission to send a driver to pick up a dozen cupcakes.

“We agreed, seeing no reason why that would be a problem,” Maker said. “When the driver picked them up, he told us they were for a VIP who was waiting for the cupcakes on a private airstrip in Paris – he wouldn’t tell us who it was but smiled and said he wished he could. Then off he went! I still wonder about that.”

Maker admits her biggest challenge has been shifting from her “high-achieving, go-go-go” mentality to letting things roll a bit. “It’s a living-at-the-beach sort of mentality here, just inside a great big city,” she said.

When not baking, Maker and her husband can be found running or cycling through their adopted city.

“It’s a good thing we are a running couple,” she said. “I can never get away from the food! I bake all day, then go out with my husband and friends to check out the new restaurants. Even when I’m out strolling, it’s hard not to stop in one of the many bakeries to try the different tarts and pastries – in the name of flavor research, of course! There’s just such an exciting culture here.”

What’s not to love?”
You asked; we listened! From exotic ports of call to majestic natural wonders, the UNI Alumni Association has expanded our travel options. So pack your bags - and your Panther spirit - and head off on a new adventure!

ALUMNUS ENCOURAGES STUDY ABROAD

As a student at UNI, Scott Horton, B.A. ’97, studied in Austria twice and served as a student leader in international programs. Scott recently moved back to the United States from Switzerland where he served as the CFO over Europe, Middle East and Africa for Honeywell. His personal experiences of studying and living abroad have taught him how important it is for business students to connect globally.

Scott and his wife, Angie, hope UNI accounting students will gain these vital connections through their annually-funded scholarship, the Scott and Angie Horton Accounting Study Abroad Scholarship. The scholarship is open to accounting majors, juniors and above, who participate in a study abroad program.

SCHOLARSHIP GIVES VETERANS A FRESH START

As a non-traditional student, I found many challenges unique to my situation,” says Mike Dunlop. I am a military veteran of 23 years and am married with four children. I feel fortunate that UNI has developed a veterans affairs office to assist us with the transition to civilian life.

The Rue Family Scholarship means a lot to me and my family. It is difficult to provide for my family with only one income. During the scholarship award ceremony, I had the opportunity to meet Mr. Rue and his son, Dave. I found that my situation was similar to that of Mr. Rue when he attended college after serving in the military and starting a family prior to college. It was enjoyable and insightful to hear not only how someone else handled college in these circumstances, but also how those experiences proved beneficial after graduation and entering the job market. I look forward to applying that advice to the remainder of school and entering the civilian workforce.

When it comes to making a difference for students, the sky is the limit. Read on for five unique gifts to UNI and the stories behind them.
THE BEST RETIREMENT GIFT EVER

Talking with Pam (Larsen) Wessely, B.A. ’74, about her years as a teacher, you feel her passion. You glimpse the sparkle in her eyes when she says, “I retired from the best job in the world - teaching children with special needs.

It all started in junior high when Pam volunteered at a school for the blind. Her passion grew, leading her to UNI. For Pam, it wasn’t about earning a degree; it was about making children smile and changing how society views the needs of children with autism, Down Syndrome or who are wheelchair bound.

Pam met her husband, Kent, B.A. ’75, while she was a senior at UNI. A major supporter of Pam’s passion, Kent is often found working alongside his wife. When Pam retired in 2013, Kent surprised her with the perfect retirement gift - a scholarship to UNI in her name.

SCHOLARSHIP INCENTIVE PROGRAM BENEFITS STUDENTS IMMEDIATELY

New to UNI is the Scholarship Incentive Program. When you establish a newly endowed scholarship or add to an existing one, your impact will increase when the university adds additional support. Normally, when you pledge your support over a period of years, your payout would not begin until a year after the pledge is fulfilled. With the Scholarship Incentive Program, your scholarship benefits students immediately.

“PAPER BORDER” FINDS HOME AT UNI GALLERY OF ART

Paul Valadez had a goal: record each day of his life for one year in visual form. The result is Paper Border, which he donated to the University of Northern Iowa Permanent Art Collection.

Valadez, a graduate of the University of North Carolina, has never visited the UNI campus, but he met UNI alumnus Chris Leonard, B.F.A. ’85, while Chris was teaching art at South Texas College in McAllen, Texas. They became close friends. “Chris often talked about how wonderful his university experience was, said Valadez. He is truly a gifted artist, and he planted a seed in my head.

Mr. Valadez’s art is energetic, ambitious and replete with its own life experience,” says Darrell Taylor, overseer of the UNI Permanent Art Collection. “We are proud to give Paper Border a Midwest home and to feature it in future programming.

Mark Butterworth’s (M.A. ’73) life was strategically mapped out. The mechanically-minded student had a singular goal growing up: to be a physicist at Ohio State University. He’d planned and studied for years, and finally had a contract in hand. Yet life doesn’t always go like clockwork.

Just before his start date, he was drafted into the Vietnam War. The only way they would defer was if he agreed to teach high school physics. Thus was born a serendipitous teaching career that spanned 20 years with Muscatine High School, and included earning his master’s degree in physics at UNI. However, as much as he enjoyed teaching, there was something missing.

“I’d grown up in the shop with my grandfather and dad,” Butterworth said. “I wanted to get back to my roots.”

Those roots go deep indeed. The Butterworths have been watchmakers and clock repairers since 1725, when they opened their first shop in England.

“In the past, the average person could not afford a watch,” he said. “That’s why villages and churches built tower clocks. But clocks today are a generational thing. They’re for those who love mechanical workings or those who value the history of what is passed down in a family.”

“Once Timex watches were invented, we thought the watchmaking industry was dead,” he said. “But clocks – they are constantly moving, so they are always wearing down.”

Butterworth started repairing movements (the inside mechanism of clocks) from clock shops and jewelry stores part-time while still teaching. He became a specialist in Black Forest clocks from Germany. By 1990, business was so good that he had to choose – stay with teaching or take his clock work full-time.

Standing in the office of his spacious 10,000-square-foot Butterworth Clocks warehouse as he shared his story, Butterworth smiled. “It turned out to be a good choice.” Not only did he negotiate deals with Black Forest manufacturers for exclusive U.S. distribution, but he also put his analytical mind to work on creating new solutions for the industry.

“Bushings are a central part of clock repair,” he said. “We weren’t impressed with the current offerings, so we began manufacturing our own.” Made of solid brass, his ButterBushings come in nine different sizes and are distributed internationally.

But it is his ButterBearing system of which he is most proud. Clock repair normally centers on the failure of the bushings and dirt on the pivot that can lead to serious damage. The ButterBearing system replaces the bushing with a bearing and negates the issue of pivot wear. A game-changer in the clock industry, his bearings can adapt to any pivot size and never wear down.

“We offer the only lifetime warranty in the business,” he said proudly, pointing to the entry in the materials catalog. He also owns the federal patent on the concept; another achievement he points to with great pride.

“It’s all about having an entrepreneurial frame of mind,” he said. “You can’t just come up with the idea; you have to take action and figure out ‘how can I make this work for me?’”

Dannen wins AD of the Year

University of Northern Iowa Director of Athletics Troy Dannen, B.A. ’89, has been honored by the National Association of Collegiate Directors of Athletics (NACDA) as one of 28 winners of the Under Armour AD of the Year Award (ADOY).

Dannen is beginning his seventh year at the helm of the UNI Department of Athletics. He received the award at the 49th annual NACDA convention on June 11 in Florida.

“Since 1998, NACDA has been highlighting the impressive contributions made by athletics directors across all divisions of our membership,” said NACDA Executive Director Bob Vecchione.

In Dannen’s six years at UNI, the Panthers have enjoyed an incredible run of success at both the conference and national levels. The success comes not only in the form of wins on each athletic platform, but ranges across academics, fund-raising, business operations and marketing.
The University of Northern Iowa men’s basketball, men’s golf, women’s golf, women’s cross country, women’s soccer and women’s volleyball teams have been recognized by the NCAA for their latest multi-year Academic Progress Rate (APR) scores—the most for a single school in the Missouri Valley Conference for the second consecutive year. These teams posted multi-year APR scores in the top 10 percent of all squads in their respective sports.

“We are proud of the commitment to academic success shown by our student-athletes, coaches and staff on a daily basis,” UNI Director of Athletics Troy Dannen said. “The NCAA’s recognition of these six teams’ achievement in the classroom validates that commitment, and earns Panther athletics an admirable place relative to our peers. Panther athletics will continue to emphasize academic, athletic and social performance as the foundation of excellence among our 400 student-athletes.”

The APR provides a real-time look at a team’s academic success each semester by tracking the academic progress of each student-athlete on scholarship. The APR accounts for eligibility, retention and graduation and provides a measure of each team’s academic performance.

UNI’s average APR score for all of its teams is 984. A perfect score in the APR is 1000.
He’s been described as “one of the most original thinkers in design” by Communication Arts magazine; he’s affectionately known as Roy to his students; and he’s an internationally-known author and speaker who (literally) wrote the book on camouflage. UNI Today gets up close and personal with writer, artist, professor and self-proclaimed comedian, Roy Behrens.

Roy Behrens, B.A. ’68
Professor of art and distinguished scholar at UNI since 1990

The truth about Roy:
I’m really a frustrated comedian. I recycle the same (great) jokes and use them (a little too often) in class. Talk about a captive audience!

Best embodiment of his artistic free spirit:
After receiving my master’s degree from the Rhode Island School of Design in 1972, I returned to UNI to teach. I earned tenure in only four years – after which I gave it up and moved to Wisconsin. (He did the same thing there, earning tenure at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee, then moving on to the Art Academy of Cincinnati before returning UNI in 1990 – to earn tenure again).

The most delightful aspect of teaching:
Imagining that, as a teacher, I’ve made some contribution to my students’ later successes in life.

Funniest story:
I was teaching typography in Milwaukee to a rather lively group of students. Back in those days, my standard attire was a corduroy sports jacket with suede elbow patches. I came into class one day and glanced up, not paying close attention. Then I looked again – all the students were wearing the same T-shirt, with “Corps du Roy” imprinted in Helvetica Medium on the front. Pranksters!

What he likes best about teaching at UNI:
I’m deeply attached to Iowa and to Midwesterners’ lack of pretension. I know these kids; I know where they came from. I want to help them go beyond the limits of what they expect of themselves.
Roy Behrens

Most prestigious moment:
I was nominated for the Smithsonian Institution’s National Design Award (the nation’s highest design award). I wasn’t chosen but it was a great honor to be nominated.

What drew him to camouflage:
I discovered that thousands of artists had designed camouflage during both World Wars. In 1981, when I wrote one of the first books on “art and camouflage,” it was an all but unknown aspect of modern history. (He has since written three more books on the subject.) I am especially interested in WWI-era “dazzle camouflage,” in which artists applied confusing abstract patterns to thousands of merchant ships, in order to confuse the aim of U-boat torpedo gunners.

More reasons he’s known as an expert on camouflage:
I’ve organized or contributed to various exhibitions on the subject, and, in 2006 at UNI, we held the first-ever international camouflage conference. More recently, in 2013, I was the opening keynote speaker for another international camouflage conference in Sydney, Australia.

In case you still aren’t convinced:
The BBC links to my camouflage blog as a WW1 resource, and there’s a really wonderful interview on 99% Invisible on YouTube. That’s pretty neat.

Parting thoughts:
In 42 years as a teacher in schools throughout the country, UNI is by far the place I’ve enjoyed the most.
Fast track to success

SOME STUDENTS ARE SIMPLY PRIMED FOR SUCCESS. This was definitely the case with UNI alumni Greg Jass, B.A. ’11, and Therese Kuster, B.A. ’12. It was obvious they were going to do great things, but nobody, including themselves, had any idea it would happen so fast. What started out a few short years ago as a wild idea is now TargetClick Marketing, one of the fastest growing business units of Mudd Advertising in Cedar Falls.

It began with an idea spawned during the Okoboji Entrepreneurial Institute, a weeklong gathering of students from around the state that focuses on entrepreneurship. When Jass returned to UNI, he was ready to put his ideas to action and immediately brought Kuster on as a partner. With assistance from UNI’s John Pappajohn Entrepreneurial Center (JPEC), they founded SEO Solutions, a search engine optimization company run out of the R. J. McElroy Student Business Incubator on campus. Soon after, they merged with Doug Drees, who was running TargetClick in UNI’s Innovation Incubator. Through this collaboration, TargetClick was reborn in 2011 as a full-service digital marketing company.

Awards and recognition were the norm for Jass and Kuster during their time as students. They were awarded $5,000 in the Pappajohn New Venture Business Plan Competition, a statewide competition for student entrepreneurs. “Winning that competition really validated our vision and made us even more motivated to succeed,” said Jass.

After that, Kuster received national praise when she was named the 2011 National Student Entrepreneur of the Year by the Young Entrepreneur Council / Collegiate Entrepreneurs’ Organization. The three of them spent the next year running TargetClick from the Innovation Incubator and took full advantage of the services offered to them. “This business could technically be run from a Starbucks, but the environment of the incubators and support systems in place really helped us...
In two short years, it has grown from the three founders to 34 employees, 25 of which are UNI alumni.

grow,” said Kuster. Drees added, “Having a place full of like-minded people and the resources available were great. I probably would have never met Greg and Therese if it weren’t for the incubator.”

On June 1, 2012, TargetClick went through its biggest transformation yet when it was acquired by Mudd Advertising in Cedar Falls.

“Chris Mudd really got the ball rolling and allowed us to run this business the way we wanted,” Jass said. Kuster added, “He was vital when it came to the business decisions that fostered our growth.”

Today, TargetClick powered by Mudd Advertising is a thriving online marketing firm. In two short years, it has grown from the three founders to 34 employees, 25 of which are UNI alumni.

Even though they have moved off campus, they are still utilizing the university by hiring student interns (10 are now full-time staff).

“It’s very rewarding, yet humbling to know that what we are doing is supporting this many people’s lives,” said Kuster.

When reflecting on his time at UNI and running his business in the incubators, Jass commented, “We would not be here today if not for the incubators and the staff at Business and Community Services, especially during the negotiations and transition to becoming a part of Mudd Advertising. Selling to Mudd was a great decision; it ramped up not only the speed of our growth, but also the fashion in which we grew.”
Honor students; swimmers; and lovers of classic literature—these twins from South Dakota are making the most of their time at UNI.

Name: Reva Bork
Senior, biochemistry/biology double major

Activities: UNI Swimming and Diving team; Presidential scholar in UNI Honors program
Future plans: Medical school to be a doctor
Why UNI: I had a friend who swam here before I did who really loved the school and made me want to find a school I could be that passionate about.

Balancing academics and athletics: I have had a lot of practice balancing school and swimming since I was a kid, but I mainly just make sure to schedule my week out on Sunday and avoid procrastinating at all costs.

Best advice for college search: Have an idea of what you want in a school before you visit. I knew I wanted a state school that was big into athletics and that I wanted to go to a school that was large, but not so large that professors didn’t know my name.
Activities: UNI Swimming and Diving team; Presidential scholar in UNI Honors program

Future plans: Medical school to be a doctor

First impressions: Everything was so green. It was a very humid day in the summer, and everything on campus looked beautiful. It fit the ideal college campus that I always pictured in my head.

Favorite thing about UNI: All of the hidden places to study. I don't like to study different subjects in the same place, so I rotate through all of my favorite places for each class. Some of my favorite study spots on campus are the library basement, the Union, and the study rooms above Rialto in Tower Center.

Best advice for a college search: I would tell high school students who are just starting their college search that you'll know when you're on the right campus. The right one will feel comfortable. If it's not comfortable, it'll never be home.

Loves: French fries; breakfast at Rialto; OneRepublic and Gone with the Wind

In fall 2012, an international student left his home in Africa and came to Cedar Falls, following his dream to earn his doctoral degree at the University of Northern Iowa.

Upon arriving in Cedar Falls, the student agreed to room with another UNI student in an off-campus apartment. Since the roommate was the leaseholder, the student paid him rent for the fall semester. In January, he again paid rent to his roommate for a full semester. However, this time things did not go so smoothly. The roommate left town, along with all the rent money. The international student found himself without an apartment and no money for new housing. It seemed that returning to Africa and giving up on his degree was his only option.

Faced with a crisis, the student turned to Leslie Williams, UNI Dean of Students, for advice. She was able to provide assistance through the UNI Women’s Giving Circle, an emergency fund created for just such a need, allowing him to stay in the country and pursue his degree.

The Dean of Student’s Office administers the release of funds to provide support to students in emergencies and/or crises related to child care, emergency housing, transportation, health care, replacement cell phones and household needs.

The emergency fund also helps students who are victims of sexual assault or are involved in domestic violence. In one such instance, Williams quickly relocated a student to campus housing and away from a threatening environment. The Women’s Giving Circle helped pay for campus housing where the student felt safe and was able to continue classes.

Helene Benitez, director of Planned Giving, facilitates the Women’s Giving Circle. “The giving circle is not a new concept,” Benitez explains. “Traditionally, women have been leading, educating and giving together at UNI for decades. The Women’s Giving Circle, which was formalized in 2012, is just one example of women’s philanthropic impact at UNI. We now have 33 members who contribute $120 or more annually to the emergency fund.”

If you are interested in joining the UNI Women’s Giving Circle or want more information, contact Benitez at helene.benitez@uni.edu or 319-273-6078.
MIS celebrates

25 YEARS OF SUCCESS

Students at UNI were able to declare Management Information Systems (MIS) as their major for the first time in the fall of 1989. Although majors in MIS had begun to appear at some universities in the mid-1970s, UNI was the first of the three Iowa Regents institutions to have a dedicated major in MIS.

MIS is the people-oriented application of information technology (IT) to solve business problems. The curriculum structure originally put in place has proved to be appropriate and effective, providing a solid technical foundation for students as well as the flexibility to adapt to the ever-changing technological landscape. What distinguishes the MIS major from other technical majors is that MIS majors also complete the same core courses required of all business majors. Moreover, many MIS students choose to double major, with Accounting, Finance, and Marketing among the most popular combinations. This blend of technical and business skills has been very appealing to employers, with graduates regularly receiving some of the highest average entry-level salaries of all majors at UNI.

Graduates of the MIS program have enjoyed excellent employment prospects over the years. Today, they continue to experience strong demand for graduates at the local, regional and even national level. MIS majors are employed in a wide variety of career positions. Graduates are working as business analysts, systems analysts, database administrators, web developers, programmers, system auditors, quality assurance specialists, trainers and other IT-related professions.

In its 25-year history, more than 1,000 students have graduated from UNI with an MIS major. The College of Business Administration, the Management Department, and, especially, the MIS faculty are proud of these graduates and pleased to be a part of their professional development and career success.

AT A GLANCE:

- High placement rate: 90% of 2013 grads found jobs in their field
- High starting salary: average is nearly $50,000
- High job satisfaction: national survey of 10,800 grads in 2010 found MIS graduates to be among the most satisfied with their career path
During the next few issues, we will be reliving memories of students and events all across campus. These are pulled from the Rod Library Special Collections and Archives, who work to collect and preserve the history of UNI. Many of the pictures chosen do not identify specific years or more importantly, the names of our past students.

As you are looking at these photos, remembering your own times on the UNI campus, please help us in identifying those pictured. Past, present and future students - we are all part of the Panther family.

Honor Your Collegiate Experience with UNI’s Class Ring

Your journey is filled with great UNI memories; they are cause for celebration and remembrance. You are invited to become part of a proud UNI tradition by wearing the Official Class Ring of the University of Northern Iowa. Available exclusively to students and alumni, the ring is a privilege you have earned.

Please visit www.balfour.com and select University of Northern Iowa.
Hello Panthers,

This is my favorite time of year! Brand-new Panthers are arriving on campus, beside themselves with excitement for what the next several years will hold. You remember moving in, getting acclimated to campus and meeting the strangers who turned out to be your best friends. This is where it all begins!

Come back to campus and relive those feelings with us this fall. Homecoming (Sept. 15-20) is loaded with fun activities, including the revival of the parade with a twist. Instead of the traditional floats, participants will transform golf carts to fit with the super hero theme, “Students by Day, Panthers by Night.” The Alumni Association is also partnering with the Hy-Vee Fan Zone for a great Alumni Tailgate in the grass lot west of the UNI-Dome. We encourage everyone to check out all of the Homecoming activities at www.uni.org/homecoming.

We also have a newly-expanded way for you to connect with UNI. We have a phenomenal line-up of alumni travel programs, including trips to London and Africa. We have organized a trip to London to join the UNI Marching Band as they perform at the London New Year’s Eve Parade. Check out more information on these and more trips at www.unialum.org/alumni-travel.

We hope you take advantage of these memorable opportunities. Go Panthers!

ALUM INVITED TO THE WHITE HOUSE

Dwight Bachman, B.A. ’70, of Willimantic, Connecticut, spent May 21 at the White House, courtesy of an invitation by the White House Office of Public Engagement to participate in a briefing on the Obama Administrations domestic and international priorities.

The discussion focused on immigration reform; the upcoming U.S.-Africa Leaders Summit; open data and transparency; and President Obamas ‘My Brothers Keeper’ Initiative, a White House drive to ensure excellence in education for African American men,” said Bachman. He shared that conversation at the White House was comprehensive, warm, free-flowing and very inspiring.

Bachman has served as public relations officer at Eastern Connecticut State University for more than 24 years. He earned his master’s in African American Studies from Cornell University.
HAACK TO RETIRE AS DEAN

Joel Haack, dean of the College of Humanities, Arts and Sciences, will retire from his administrative duties and responsibilities on Dec. 31, 2014, after nearly 40 years of higher education teaching and administration. He will return to the faculty as a member of the Department of Mathematics in fall 2015.

Haack has completed 20 years in administration at UNI, beginning as head of the mathematics department. Over the next 11 years, he held several appointments as dean and interim dean, serving with three presidents, four provosts, 35 department heads and seven associate deans.
Matthew Kroeger, B.A. ’96, is the new associate vice president of enrollment management at UNI. He will build and lead a team charged with working across the university to envision and deliver an optimal enrollment program, among other enrollment responsibilities. Kroeger earned a M.Ed. with Distinction in Educational Leadership from Northern Arizona University and a bachelor’s degree in business from UNI. Previously, he has served as director of recruitment and admissions at Idaho State University; as the senior associate director of admissions at the University of Iowa; and in leadership roles in admissions at Northern Arizona University and Morningside College.

On the last day of UNI’s Capstone in France course, Department of Languages and Literatures Associate Professor Elizabeth Zwanziger was snapping a picture of her class (15 UNI students) in front of Notre Dame de Paris. Two passers-by shouted out “Class of ’69! and Class of ’70!” Alumni Parker and Joan Foley then joined the group in the photo (on either end of the picture).
