April 2019

Bishops seek end to immigration enforcement raids

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarworks.uni.edu/postville_documents

Part of the Public Affairs, Public Policy and Public Administration Commons

Let us know how access to this document benefits you

Recommended Citation

"Bishops seek end to immigration enforcement raids" (2019). Postville Project Documents. 117.
https://scholarworks.uni.edu/postville_documents/117

This Document is brought to you for free and open access by the The Postville Project at UNI ScholarWorks. It has been accepted for inclusion in Postville Project Documents by an authorized administrator of UNI ScholarWorks. For more information, please contact scholarworks@uni.edu.
Bishops seek end to immigration enforcement raids

By Mark Pattison Catholic News Service

WASHINGTON (CNS) -- If federal immigration officials cannot create more "humane" conditions when making enforcement raids against undocumented immigrants, then "these enforcement raids should be abandoned," said Bishop John C. Wester of Salt Lake City, chairman of the U.S. bishops' Committee on Migration.

The raids, conducted by the Immigration and Customs Enforcement division of the Department of Homeland Security, "reveal, sadly, the failure of a seriously flawed immigration system," Bishop Wester said at a Sept. 10 press conference at the bishops' headquarters in Washington.

"The humanitarian costs of these raids are immeasurable and unacceptable in a civilized society," he added. "Our current policies do little to solve the problem of illegal immigration to this country -- they simply appear to do so, often at the cost of family integrity and human dignity."

Bishop Wester noted that after Congress' failure to pass a comprehensive immigration bill last year, Homeland Security started conducting mass raids, mostly at workplaces.

A May raid at the world's largest kosher meatpacker, in Postville, Iowa, resulted in 389 arrests and criminal charges lodged against 305 workers. Bishop Ricardo Ramirez of Las Cruces, N.M., said at the press conference that Homeland Security had been conducting raids in Roswell, N.M., during the same week the U.S. bishops' Administrative Committee was holding its Sept. 9-11 meeting.

Bishop Ramirez said attendance was "noticeably lower" at an annual special Mass he celebrated in the diocese Sept. 7. "There is fear," he added. "People are afraid to go out to the grocery store."

"Many Latino families are of mixed legal status and are fearful of being torn apart," said Bishop James A. Tamayo of Laredo, Texas, who also was at the press conference. "As families are destroyed, so are their communities."

The raids, Bishop Tamayo added, "pit human beings against each other in a violent and frightening way."

The Homeland Security immigration enforcement budget will grow from $9.7 billion in 2004 to $15 billion in 2009, according to Donald Kerwin, executive director of the Catholic Legal Immigration Network. "To date, he added, 338 miles of border fencing (have) has been erected, and thousands of additional Border Patrol agents are being added to the existing force of 17,000.

"The Department of Homeland Security now detains 32,000 people per night, most of them in 310 local prisons," Kerwin said, adding that the work-site enforcement raids are characterized by "their frequency, their immensity, the criminal prosecution of many of those arrested, and their devastating impact on families and communities."

He said that those charged in Postville "were pressured to accept plea agreements or to face more serious criminal charges."

The press conference by the bishops came one day after Bishop Wester said the U.S. Catholic Church would join an interfaith effort to change U.S. immigration law. To prepare for that effort in the next Congress, it also would join the Tour of the Faithful, an educational effort during September and October to convince people of faith to support changes in U.S. immigration policy.

"We're in a dark period," said Bishop Wester during a Sept. 9 conference call to announce the 17-city Tour of the Faithful.

"Our current national immigration policy ... consists of work-site enforcement raids" that result in, among other things, "the dislocation of U.S. citizen children from their parents," he added.

"As a nation -- a nation of immigrants, I might add -- we cannot accept the labor of immigrants while undermining their basic human dignity," Bishop Wester said.

"At the same time, the issue of immigration reform is receiving little attention in the presidential race, and negative attention in the media," he added. Through the Tour of the Faithful, he said, "we hope to lift our voices to call attention to this important issue in the days and weeks ahead so that a new president and new Congress can address these issues early in 2009."

Asked at the Sept. 10 press conference what elements an immigration bill should have, Bishop Wester suggested a "pathway to citizenship for the people who are already here" that could include fines for immigrants who have been staying in the United States illegally, since people say, "I'm willing to pay any price you want me to pay to stay in the country." He also suggested a "back of the line" approach to legalization as punishment for those who have remained in the country illegally.

When asked which presidential candidate's platform better reflected the church's position on immigration issues, Bishop Wester replied, "I don't think we want to go there. I know I don't."

END

09/10/2008 4:39 PM ET