KENT LAMMERT

RECOLLECTION

fresh fallen rain mingles in noon-cut grass, as an earth perfume flows like thread through a needle-eye in my window.

engulfed in september's sun, her silhouette in love's creek, slow drifts o'er the pane.

thoughts of recollection bathe on the faded sill.

BLACKBIRD BLIND

blackbird warriors sail out autumn branch camouflage, in sky cotton ships.
drifting in a star cemetery sea, death wings like so many lashes, pour o'er moon man's eye

gone

blind.

Kent Lammert is a senior English major. "I write to find out who I am . . . It's the only time I'm really honest with myself." He first started writing poetry two and a half years ago, and is working on a book to be published this summer.
