UNIBusiness thanks James H. Slife (Accounting ’73), CEO, Pioneer Graphics, for his company’s generous support.
“Hard work and high standards.” We initiated our successful AACSB International re-accreditation bid with those words, identifying UNIBusiness as an institution where “fundamentals remain the best road to success for our students and our program.”

At the time, we admitted that our attitude might seem a little old-fashioned, and recent studies confirm that our stubborn insistence on essential business knowledge and traditional work values is increasingly unusual in American higher education.

This past summer, Education Outlook published a report showing that “in 1961, the average full-time student at a four-year college in the United States studied about 24 hours per week, while his modern counterpart puts in only 14 hours per week.” Authors Philip Babcock and Mindy Marks carefully tested the data and assured themselves that the dramatic decline could not be attributed to student work status, parental education, major choice, the type of institution students attended, or new, high-tech study tools. The data revealed only one explanation: declining achievement expectations in American higher education.

We are not surprised by these results. Multiple studies and ample anecdotal evidence point to a widening gap between what contemporary students consider reasonable effort and what we at UNIBusiness expect students to deliver. Our students, likewise, seem to be aware of the gap. A national survey conducted by AACSB International asked students how challenging their business courses were in comparison to their other undergraduate courses. The UNIBusiness student response placed us No. 1 in the nation.

While we cherish a top billing in rigor, we are concerned about the pressure our faculty members feel as they try to maintain their high expectations while educating students who are accustomed to doing less and less for ever-higher grades. Lowering our expectations to match our students’ comfort level is not an option. Our claim of “hard work and high standards” is not merely a branding maneuver. High expectations are a defining characteristic of the education we deliver — the basis of our reputation and a source of faculty pride. At a practical level, those expectations offer assurance that our graduates can deliver the essential business knowledge and traditional work values we promise to employers.

Students elsewhere might follow the disturbing trajectory that Babcock and Marks have documented: expecting high grades for little work. We, however, will continue to demand the best of our students, a message at the heart of our new Professional Readiness Program (PRP), which we have specifically designed to deliver contemporary professional skills — the third core ingredient in a UNIBusiness education.

Our students listen when alumni return to campus to tell them that solid knowledge, hard work and professional assertiveness are all essential to a successful career. If you want to join our PRP Executive Support Network to help our students recognize the importance of essential business knowledge, traditional work values and contemporary professional skills, send me an e-mail, call or stop by if you are in Cedar Falls. I always feel fortunate to hear about our graduates’ lives and to receive their advice about how we can become better and better.

Things have not been “business as usual” on Main Street, USA. Idyllic Midwestern small-town life seems to be evaporating as Iowa’s rural communities become inextricably linked to the global economy.

“Iowa has fared reasonably well in terms of the recent recession,” said Randy Pilkington, executive director of UNIBusiness’ Business & Community Services division, “but slow population growth, global pressure on manufacturing jobs, and the transition of community leadership pose significant challenges to the state’s economic outlook.”

Many worry that the 2010 census will confirm a continuing trend, finding towns shrinking in size, unable to support the infrastructure, public services or retail trade that sustain a community’s livelihood and lifestyle. Still, I’ve been visiting small towns across the state over the past year, looking at the ways communities support entrepreneurship, and have been struck by the pragmatic but positive outlook on Main Street. And I began to wonder how alumni who have established careers in Iowa’s small communities apply their business knowledge to these challenging economic times.

During the week of the Howard County Fair, I tracked down alumni living in Cresco, the county seat of 3,900, and the surrounding communities of Lime Springs, Riceville, Protivin and Elma. These folks made a commitment to a small-town business career with their eyes wide open, and they had some interesting insights on that choice and its challenges.
a small community requires strong networking and relationship-building skills, but it also requires an outward looking business orientation, according to Pat Boyle (Business Teaching ’76), director of business development for Hawkeye Rural Electric Coop. A career in a small community “is not merely running a local store and keeping your head down,” he said. “The economy of Iowa requires an entrepreneurial outlook, access to resources and regional cooperation.”

Globalization has had “both positive and negative effects,” said Midthus, who cites one Cresco business now shipping most of its product to China while another has lost jobs to Mexico.

Bret Wiltse (Management ’02), assistant manager at Fareway, describes the rising bar for business expertise. His company is now able to access the entire globe for new ideas and new trends, but so can his customers. With their “unlimited knowledge of food choices … we have to be ultra sensitive to what the consumer wants to try,” he said. “We must now become experts on the newest trends to still be considered experts by our customers.

“You can’t survive in a small town unless you’re good.”

Adam Polashek (MIS ’04) added, “When you have a good product or service, people appreciate what you do.”

Planning for the Future

Howard County has a long history of impressive community projects, from the hospital and assisted living centers, educational facilities and housing developments, to recreational facilities and a state-of-the-art day care center. Pilkington recalls working with the Howard County economic development group during the ’90s, noting “their leadership is the primary reason for sustained success.” Last year, UNI’s outreach programs worked with 44 different businesses, entrepreneurs and local organizations in Howard County, and every success has come about because of proactive leadership, cooperative planning, local financing and support from the entire community.

ALUMNI IN HOWARD COUNTY, IOWA, HAVE FOUND A TIE BETWEEN STRONG COMMUNITIES AND STRONG BUSINESSES.

It takes some work to convert resources into sustainable business activity. In his 10 years at Hawkeye REC, Boyle has leveraged Rural Economic Development Loan and Grant funds into one of the largest revolving loan funds in the state of Iowa, with $2 million in funds available for economic development. Still, funding is only part of the equation. In a small community, the restricted market, narrow supply chain and shallow labor pool mean that every member of the business community is a vital element in every business venture.

The path to a small town business career was not necessarily an easy one, even for those who knew early on that was what they wanted. Wiltse, a fourth generation Fareway manager, knew the first day of his part-time job at 14 that he wanted to run a store one day. Shelly (Hove) Hruska (Accounting ’97) and Schmauss, on the other hand, both swore they were never going to come home after college. Ollendick and McConnell, roommates at UNI and in Des Moines after they graduated, both wanted to wind up in Cresco, but knew it would take some patience. They had to parlay company changes and several years of transfers into the kinds of career positions they wanted.

There’s been a lot of talk about Iowa’s “brain drain,” but the alumni in Cresco prove that UNIBusiness sends some of its best back to the small towns of Iowa. Their positions demand a bit more flexibility, a sincere commitment to the economic vitality of the entire business community, and some creativity in developing a career path. The result, though, seems to be a career that expresses the essence of business as the engine of a sustainable economic community.

There is work to do, and the UNIBusiness alumni I spoke with seem prepared to get the job done.
A Swing and a Hit

Big League experience makes a Little League difference

Little League baseball was born in Pennsylvania in 1939, with kids in a three-team league playing in a vacant lot. Ten years later, 307 leagues dotted the U.S. Today, nearly 3 million boys and girls step up to the plate each summer — great news for Tyson Hanish (Marketing ’09).

As founder and CEO of BigLeagueAnalysis.com, Hanish has created a business to develop the skills of boys and girls across the U.S. “I wanted a career that would keep me in the game of baseball,” he said. “Doing something in baseball was pretty important to me, so when my professional playing career ended, I used that as my starting point.”

With guidance and support from UNI’s Student Business Incubator, Hanish launched BigLeagueAnalysis.com in June 2009, applying his marketing education and his high school, college and professional baseball experience to the enterprise. His company provides detailed hitting analysis and instruction to aspiring ball players via Internet technology.

“At BigLeagueAnalysis.com, we focus on getting young players in the correct ‘hitting position,’ ” Hanish said. “This foundation has to be set before we can break down the significant movements in each swing stage.”

The average client is 11 to 13 years old and is “serious about baseball.” Through the business’s website, clients upload videos of their hitting, and then receive a video that breaks down the swing into six stages: stance, timing transition, hitting position, rotation, contact and finish. Clients also receive detailed instruction on what they are doing wrong and right with their swings and suggested drills to help them improve.

“If they are willing to work at the game and on their swing, these kids will all see improvement using our videos,” Hanish said.

Today ESPN broadcasts the Little League World Series, brawls between parents break out in the stands at youth activities and children are treated for overuse injuries at higher and higher rates. The increased seriousness of youth athletics can be a target for criticism — too much pressure, too soon, and not enough fun.

But Hanish sees the other side of a desire to be the best: dedication and passion. “Baseball provides so many life lessons that go beyond performance on the field,” he said. “We see our business as a program for young players striving to be better, putting in the time and effort to overcome challenges in baseball and in life.”

“Most parents who support their children with professional and specialized training are supporting their kids’ interests, and when kids enjoy the successes that come from practice, competition and many hours of hard work, the game itself is a lot more fun.”

In the year since launching, BigLeagueAnalysis.com has extended beyond its “dot-com” domain.

“In addition to the Web-based instruction, we participate in youth baseball camps around the country and offer camps for coaches,” Hanish said. He also works with kids one-on-one as head coach of the NYC Stars Baseball Club.

“It’s all part of my baseball brand,” he said. “NYC Stars has five teams of very devoted kids between the ages of 8 and 11. We teach them the fundamentals of baseball and sportsmanship, and we get them ready for competitive high school baseball.”

Hanish feels his time in the Student Business Incubator program was just as essential to getting to where he is today as his time in the batter’s box.

“The student incubator created the perfect place for me to get a handle on what I wanted to do with my business,” he said. In a sense, what the incubator does for aspiring entrepreneurs like Hanish, is what he does for aspiring baseball stars. “They provided me with a program to follow to fully develop my business model. No one does anything for you. You do the work yourself, but the support you get is tremendous.”

The UNI Student Business Incubator (SBI), a program of the John Pappajohn Entrepreneurial Center, is a learning laboratory designed to inspire and educate students interested in entrepreneurship. Located in the Business and Community Services building, the incubator offers one-on-one technical assistance, professional services and training, office space and standard equipment, and mentoring programs to UNI students who meet the SBI requirements. With its 10 fully occupied office suites and numerous programs and events throughout the year, SBI has served hundreds of college entrepreneurs since it began in 2005. SBI Influencing Iowa
While Tyson Hanish returned to New York with his business, a number of SBI graduates not only stayed in Iowa, but they returned to their hometowns to start, renovate or rejuvenate a family business. For example:

La Prensa, a free, Spanish-language newspaper published every other week, based in Carroll, was founded and is owned by Carlos Arguello (Marketing and Real Estate ’07). It continues to thrive as western Iowa’s most successful Hispanic newspaper.

Amy (Coombs) Kern (Marketing ’08) and her husband, Kyle, bought his father’s chimney services business in Clear Lake. They changed the name to Top Hat Chimney Services and added some new product and service lines. Kern noted her experience in the entrepreneurship program gave her “knowledge, relationships and real-world experiences. Perhaps most importantly, I graduated from UNI knowing that owning my own business is possible.”

Devan Green (Management ’09) bought land from his father near Conrad to begin Green’s Organics. Its 40 acres of cropland is certified organic and all of the livestock is raised organically with the exception of feed. It is in the process of transitioning to produce adequate organic feed supply to support all livestock.

With SBI support, Stephen Rausch (Management ’09), reconstructed the internal workings of Rausch Brothers Trucking, of Ionia, adding a Quickbooks system, revamping the operations and supply chain functions, and improving efficiency in truck and driver operations. He continues to work for the business, which was started by his grandfather in 1979.

As more students come through the SBI program, expect to see more Iowa start-ups with origins that can be traced back to UNI.

UNIMeansBusiness... In and Out of the Classroom

UNIBusiness student-athletes made quite a showing for the Panthers in 2010. They stood at the helm of many of the University’s athletic teams, baring their leadership capabilities as captains and high academic achievers.

Sweet Sixteen

No one at UNI will ever forget the gutsy outside shot from Ali Farokhmanesh (Finance ’10) that knocked off mighty Kansas and busted everyone’s bracket in the maddest game of the 2010 March Madness. The 69-67 win sent the Panthers to their first Sweet Sixteen appearance, and the game was immortalized with ESPN’s 2010 ESPY Award for the “Biggest Upset” of the year. Farokhmanesh now plays professional basketball in Europe. The UNI Sweet Sixteen team also included UNIBusiness students Brian Haak (Marketing ’10), Matt Morrison (pre-business) and Tyler Lange (Accounting and Economics) and made a national statement that UNI means Business … on and off the court.

LEADERSHIP

... On the Basketball Court

Captain Kim Wypiszynski (Management ’10) was named the Missouri Valley Conference Newcomer of the Year, earned honorable mention All-Valley honors, and led UNI with 13.0 points and 5.0 rebounds during the 2009-10 season. The 2009-2010 team also made history with its first appearance in the NCAA women’s basketball tournament.

... On the Football Field

As practice for the 2010 football season got underway, all four captains were UNIBusiness students: Ryan Mahaffey (Economics), Schuyler Oordt (Marketing), Jamar Thompson (Marketing) and Austin Zlab (MIS). Mahaffey and former teammate Josh Mahoney (Economics ’09) received Academic All-District recognition at the conclusion of the 2009 season. These student-athletes have discovered the connections between teamwork and excellence in sports and the rigorous courses on business leadership. They are finding ways to mindfully put what they learned in the classroom into professional practice.

... On the Track

The U.S. Track & Field and Cross Country Coaches Association men’s and women’s Division I All-Academic Track & Field Teams each boasted a UNIBusiness connection. Hurdler Greg Offerman (Finance and Real Estate ’09) and Emily Prinsen (Marketing ’10), javelin, were on the list for their academic achievements in spring 2010.
In 2010, Josh Mahoney (Economics ’09) earned the Walter Byers Award, the highest academic honor the NCAA bestows upon a student-athlete. The award is open to all athletes in all sports in all divisions of play. One female and one male student-athlete are honored each year in recognition of outstanding academic achievement and potential for success in postgraduate study. It includes a post-graduate scholarship worth $48,000 over two years.

During Mahoney’s years at UNI, he posted a perfect 4.0 GPA, made the Dean’s List every semester and stayed active in the College with an undergraduate research project, serving as co-president of the Pre-Law Club and taking advantage of international experiences. His athletic and academic accolades are vast, ranging from the Walter Byers Award to First-team Missouri Valley Conference honors to UNI’s Merchant Scholarship for graduate study.

“The College of Business Administration at UNI helped me grow as a person and reach my full potential as a student-athlete,” said Mahoney, now enrolled in the University of Chicago School of Law, where he was recently awarded the Tony Patino Fellowship. “In particular, the CBA’s support for undergraduate research projects and international experiences helped shape me into the person I am today.”

Mahoney’s global perspective widened with a Capstone course in Nicaragua, a research exchange with the Plekhanov Russian Academy of Economics in Moscow and two economic conferences, which were all made possible by Lawrence Jepson International Study Abroad grants and the Dean’s Fund for Excellence.

After earning his law degree, Mahoney’s goal is to work for an organization that strives for social justice at a national or international level.

... In the Pool
Butterflyer Tori Ward (Management) was named captain of UNI’s 2009-2010 swim team.

... On the Soccer Field
Reinforcing the notion that UNI means Business … on and off the field, the UNI soccer squad’s core leadership group is comprised entirely of UNI Business students. Laura Heaton (Marketing), Chelsie Hochstedler (Marketing), Ericka O’Meara (Accounting and Finance) and Megan Cameron (Finance) are the 2010 team captains.

... On the Volleyball Court
Two UNI Business students were selected to lead the UNI volleyball squad. Ellie Blankenship (MIS) (top left) and Beth Discher (Accounting) (bottom left) serve as captains for the Panthers, who opened the season ranked 24th in the American Volleyball Coaches Association preseason poll. After the 2009 season, Blankenship was selected to participate in the U.S. Women’s National A2 Program, capturing the bronze medal at the USA Volleyball Open National Championships in June.

In 2010, Josh Mahoney (Economics ’09) earned the Walter Byers Award, the highest academic honor the NCAA bestows upon a student-athlete. The award is open to all athletes in all sports in all divisions of play. One female and one male student-athlete are honored each year in recognition of outstanding academic achievement and potential for success in postgraduate study. Contemporary employers realize the importance of a diverse workforce to foster innovation and creativity and to serve an increasingly diverse marketplace. Accordingly, UNIBusiness has embraced its responsibility to ensure that our graduating classes include a pool of highly qualified, diverse job candidates.

Recruiting at the top

UNIBusiness has always tried to recruit high-achieving high school students — students who will thrive in UNI’s rigorous business program. Jon Cox, coordinator of minority and student diversity programs, has tapped his connections with educators, recruiters and community members to increase the number of top minority students accepted to the College.

This year’s recruiting class, for example, includes Janell Buckner (Accounting), valedictorian at Normandy High School in St. Louis, who graduated with scholarship offers worth more than $1 million. With her heart set on a Big Four accounting career, UNIBusiness offered Buckner more than just a financial package.

“I don’t hesitate to encourage a top high school student, like Janell, to come to UNI to study accounting,” said Department of Accounting Head Marty Wartick. “Our program has a national reputation for excellence, and our students graduate with unlimited opportunities. UNI is a target recruiting school for the most prestigious accounting firms in the country, in addition to numerous other business organizations. Students like Janell can come to UNI and be confident that they will be fully prepared to begin a career in accounting when they graduate.”

While a financial package helps, much of UNI’s recruitment depends on the program’s traditional strength: a caring faculty whose personal attention ensures each student is putting in the effort needed to acquire the essential business knowledge required for success.

A big part of the recruiting process involves getting to know the faculty. “There is no question that the campus visit makes a difference,” Cox said.

Top student recruits are invited to visit UNI Business, meet faculty members and get a taste of the university environment. Many faculty members have even gone the extra mile to meet prospective students and their parents in targeted communities. Cox organized an event in St. Louis in conjunction with last year’s Sweet Sixteen NCAA men’s basketball tournament appearance, and several professors made the trip. The result was a 100-percent commitment rate from the prospective business majors attending the event, including Buckner, who told the St. Louis American, “I chose Northern Iowa because of the personal attention I received from staff and students when I visited the campus, as well as the strength of their business school. Everyone seemed to be focused on me and my needs.”

Student engagement

Still, an empty promise of support would waste the recruiting effort. If students who choose UNI Business don’t find themselves on that path to success, they and their prospective employers both lose. Retention must become the priority once a student is recruited.

EXCEL, a student organization Cox advises, was established with retention in mind. It attempts to foster high academic and service expectations for business students from diverse backgrounds, and it maps out a plan for success starting with their first day on campus.

With each year of recruiting success, a growing network among the College’s multicultural students offers peer support that probably makes the most difference, in the long run, to UNI Business’ diversity effort. Recent graduates Pernell Cezar (Finance and Marketing ’10) and Clarence Lobdell III (Accounting and MAcc ’09), for instance, have been instrumental in developing strong recruiting connections with their hometown schools in Gary, Ind. As underclassmen, they’d been mentored by Angel Anderson (Finance ’07), who served as president of EXCEL.

Alumni and professional involvement

Close ties with diverse professionals and alumni help students see the opportunities that lie ahead. Scholarship winner Sheleita Miller (Accounting and Economics), for example, credits a conversation with Tony Anderson, an African-American associate at Ernst & Young, for her realization that a successful career as a CPA would provide opportunities and networks that would allow her to give back to her community.

By enrolling a top-notch, diverse student body, providing on-campus support systems and building strong networks with successful business men and women from all backgrounds, UNI Business remains a place employers can go to meet all their recruitment needs.

Diversity Scholarship Awards

All public accounting firms that recruit at UNI are committed to diversifying their workforces so they mirror their customer base. Ernst & Young shows its commitment by granting an Ernst & Young Diversity Scholarship in the amount of $5,000 per year to an accounting major from an underrepresented group. This year’s scholarship was awarded to Sheleita Miller (Accounting and Economics) from Gary, Ind.

Miller began her fourth year at UNI in fall 2010. She is passionate about giving back to the community and started a UNI student organization to work with at-risk youth.

“To remain competitive, it is critical that business schools and corporations work toward maximizing the creativity and innovation that come from diverse perspectives,” notes Steve Marlow (Accounting ’78), a partner with Ernst & Young’s Des Moines office. “By awarding this scholarship, we help strengthen the University of Northern Iowa’s ability to develop the next generation of diverse and inclusive leaders.”

Additional scholarships that support multicultural students and diversity are offered through UNI Business and the UNI Office of Student Financial Aid. Visit www.uni.edu/finaid for more information.

Steve Marlow, a partner with Ernst & Young in Des Moines, presents Sheleita Miller with the first Ernst & Young Diversity Scholarship award at UNI Business.

UNI Business thanks Ernst & Young for supporting our students.
UNIBusiness In Action, Always Online

UNIBusiness celebrates excellence in student competitions, program milestones, and faculty and staff accomplishments throughout the year, and there is much to celebrate. The following is just a small sample from the hundreds of success stories posted online each year. Make www.cba.uni.edu a regular destination for UNIBusiness news and information!

Marketing Students Dominate National Competition

Marketing Students Dominate National Competition

Members of UNIBusiness’ Pi Sigma Epsilon chapter, Epsilon Theta, competed at the organization’s national convention, earning first place in six different events, a total of 17 awards, and $10,000 in scholarships. To put this outstanding performance into perspective, consider that 66 schools were represented, and UNI students earned one third of the total scholarship money available.

PSE is the College’s sales and marketing student organization, and its purpose is to provide its members with real-world business experience; competitive opportunities to hone their sales, marketing and presentation skills; and professional networking opportunities.

UNIBusiness Maintains AACSB Accreditation

The Association to Advance Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB International) awarded UNIBusiness an unconditional reaffirmation of its accreditation after a rigorous review process, which takes place every five years.

“The review team took a really hard look,” said UNIBusiness Dean Farzad Moussavi, “and found no reason to offer anything other than its highest recommendation: straight and unconditional reaffirmation of accreditation for another five years. With the significant financial pressures over the past several years, it’s a tribute to our faculty and staff that we continue to deliver a world class education.”

AACSB International offers the global gold standard of business school accreditation. Worldwide, only about 5 percent of business schools hold AACSB accreditation.
Online voting for the magazine’s contest ended in September, and the winner will be featured in the January issue of Entrepreneur.

UNIBusiness Students Win at Entrepreneurial Institute

UNIBusiness students were on winning teams at the 2009 and the 2010 Okoboji Entrepreneurial Institute. Rachel Ruplinger (Accounting ’09 MAcc) (above) and Megan Horn (Marketing) (left) were on winning teams in 2009; Nick Cash (Economics and Computer Science) and Andrew Steckel (MAcc) were on winning teams in 2010. Each year, eight UNI students attend the institute, with 24 other students from the University of Iowa, Iowa State University, Buena Vista University and Iowa Lakes Community College. The participants receive 3 hours of academic credit while getting an advanced study of entrepreneurship; a simulation exercise; seminars led by successful entrepreneurs, business leaders and community leaders; and networking to enhance their understanding of opportunities in Iowa.

Deeds Honored with Iowa Governor’s Volunteer Award

T. Wayne Davis Entrepreneur-In-Residence and instructor of accounting David Deeds (Accounting ’90) received the Iowa Governor’s Volunteer Award for his work to revitalize Main Street Waterloo. Deeds was nominated for the award by staff at the Iowa Department of Economic Development. Since Main Street Waterloo’s inception in 1986, the city’s central business district has seen impressive growth in new businesses, new jobs and private reinvestments.

SMS Opens Full-service Facility

Strategic Marketing Services (SMS) celebrated its 20th anniversary and opened a new, full-service focus group facility in UNI’s Business and Community Services building. SMS offers a full range of qualitative and quantitative marketing research and analysis services for businesses to create a customized marketing strategy for each client.

c.a.r.e. Award Goes to MBA Student

UNI’s Sustainability Council bestowed a c.a.r.e. (creating a responsible environment) Award to Halil Dulgeroglu (MBA) for his work with Rider Recycling Revolution, a project to facilitate residence hall recycling.

UNIBusiness No. 1 in Producing Certified Global Business Professionals

UNI has produced more student Certified Global Business Professionals (CGBP) than any other university due to a progressive program that develops contemporary skills for today’s job market. CGBP status, designated by NASBITE International, indicates the individual has a certain body of knowledge needed in the area of global trade. It is based on the four domains of global management, global marketing, supply chain management and trade finance. A Global Trade Practices course complements the core business courses to prepare UNIBusiness students for certification.

UNIBusiness thanks John Pappajohn for his generous support of student entrepreneurship; the late Adele Whitenack Davis, who established the T. Wayne Davis Chair in Entrepreneurship in memory of her husband T. Wayne Davis; and those who contributed to the Dean’s Fund for Excellence, which supports professional development opportunities for students.
Getting Perspective from Both Ends of the Global Economy

Totally engaged. That’s how Pernell Cezar (Finance and Marketing ’10) (above, far right) approaches life, and it’s how he spent his time at UNI. When the former Northern Iowa Student Government president wanted to pick up international experience before beginning his job with Target Corporation in Minneapolis, he characteristically threw himself in wholeheartedly. Over the summer he visited two countries on two continents with economies on opposing ends of the spectrum.

With careful planning and financial support from UNIBusiness, Cezar first explored the business and culture of Nicaragua, returned to the U.S., and then made his way to China, which has a gross domestic product more than 500 times greater than Nicaragua’s.

“My trips not only exposed me to the differences among international businesses,” Cezar said, “but also how culture, language, values and norms affect success within international business.”

Cezar’s trip to Nicaragua was tied to Socio-Economic Reality of Central America, a course designed to offer students an important international experience and to learn first-hand about economic conditions outside the U.S. In Dalian, China, Cezar and fellow UNI seniors joined students from the University of Economics in Katowice, Poland; EAFIT University, in Colombia; and Dalian Nationalities University to fulfill the UNI Liberal Arts Capstone. They made stops at multi-national companies, had lessons on Chinese language and culture, and explored the city and formed relationships with the students from Poland, Colombia and China.

“I am a strong believer in development through learning about different perspectives and understanding those differences,” Cezar said upon his return. “Thanks to the support from UNIBusiness, I was able to gain perspective on two contrasting economies.”

Read first-hand accounts of the eight UNI students’ experiences in Dalian at weblogs. uni.edu/chinadiaries/chinatour.html.
First MAcc Student Takes Internship in Dalian

Darrick Snitker (Accounting ’09 and MAcc) took a summer internship at Lianmei Machinery Company in Dalian, China, assisting the firm’s move to a more lean and process-focused facility. Snitker’s experience exposed him to a foreign company’s point of view of doing business with American companies. As a result, he is confident he “will be much better prepared to work not only with Chinese employees, co-workers and clients, but anybody with a background different from mine.”

New Internship Opportunity in Nicaragua

Tyler Roe (Economics and Spanish ’09) was the first UNIBusiness student to take advantage of a new 10-week internship in Nicaragua. He taught business concepts to 18 youth from local communities in the Matagalpa region and worked with the faculty to address environmental issues.

UNIBusiness Student Benefits from New Brazil Exchange Program

Dillon Bottorf (Marketing and Spanish) is the first UNI student participating in the Iowa-Midwest Brazil Exchange in Business and Agriculture. This exchange program offers students an opportunity to gain international work experience along with their studies abroad. While the five participating Iowa students spend June through December in Brazil, eight students from Brazilian partner schools study in Iowa. During the exchange, the Iowa students take a Portuguese language immersion program upon arriving in Brazil and then move into a practicum with Pioneer Hi-Bred, Malunga Organic Farms or Ministry of Agriculture. UNI partnered with Kirkwood and Hawkeye community colleges to obtain the grant that funds the exchange and works hand-in-hand with Universidade Federal De Goiás and the Universidade de Brasília in Brazil.

New Partnership with ESSEC

This fall UNIBusiness finalized an agreement for student and faculty exchanges with ESSEC, France’s top business school and the first business school outside the U.S. to achieve AACSB accreditation.

New Cost Neutral Semester Abroad Program

UNIBusiness students can now gain an international edge and stay on budget

The new Cost Neutral Semester Abroad Program will allow UNIBusiness students to spend a semester studying abroad at the same cost or lower than the cost to attend UNI. The students also can stay on schedule toward graduation instead of having to pay for an extra semester to fulfill requirements not available during their overseas studies. UNIBusiness students who are not proficient in a second language can study in English at a number of institutions, including Dalian Nationalities University in China, ESC-Rennes and ESSEC in France, Faith University in Turkey, National Chengchi University in Taiwan, Nelson Mandela Metropolitan University in South Africa, and University of Economics Katowice in Poland. Non-English opportunities are available as well.

UNIBusiness thanks Bill & Charlotte Kimball, Michael & Jacqueline Mrosko and Eugene & Mary Anne Dietz for their continued support of our international programs.
Faculty Recognition

Delivering essential business knowledge requires outstanding faculty willing to demand the best of themselves and of their students.

Faculty Teaching Award
Sponsored by United Fire Group
Lisa Jepsen, Economics
Students appreciate Jepsen’s dedication and commitment. She receives some of the highest student assessment scores in UNIBusiness for one of its most rigorous courses.

Faculty Research Award
Sponsored by David & Cindy Petratis
Dennis Schmidt, Accounting
Schmidt meets the challenge of teaching a course that changes as quickly as the business world changes and moves his field forward with cutting-edge research.

Outstanding Junior Faculty Award
Sponsored by University Book and Supply
Karthik Iyer, Marketing
In addition to his dedication to teaching, Iyer has received three summer fellowships for research projects and published in numerous journals. His promotion to associate professor and tenure were recently approved.

Outstanding Faculty Contribution to Business and Community Services
David Deeds, Accounting
As adviser of the Collegiate Entrepreneurs Organization and Students in Free Enterprise (now merged into one organization, UNI Entrepreneurs) and lead entrepreneurship faculty member, Deeds has been instrumental in getting UNIBusiness students interested in entrepreneurship.

Faculty Service Award
Sponsored by Gaylen & Glenna Miller
Ken McCormick, Economics, Christine Bauman, Accounting, Jerry Smith, Management, and Tony McAdams, Management, represented the College on a taskforce that provided a comprehensive evaluation of every academic program in the University, a monumental task and the first of its kind in the history of UNI.

UNIBusiness thanks United Fire Group, David & Cindy Petratis, Gaylen & Glenna Miller, and University Book and Supply for sponsoring faculty awards.
New Faculty

Demand for Ph.D.s in business far exceeds supply, and UNIBusiness is further limited by the fact that it wants those special Ph.D.s who share its passion for teaching and can transfer their practical experiences and academic expertise into an exciting classroom environment. Learn more about our newest faculty members, below, and catch up on the activities of faculty from your time at UNI by browsing the directory at www.cba.uni.edu.

Accounting

Instructor Hem M. Mpundu is completing his doctorate at the University of Oklahoma following an MBA from Murray State University and a Bachelor of Mechanical Engineering from the University of Southampton in the United Kingdom. Mpundu is a fellow of the Association of Chartered Certified Accountants. He has significant professional experience and has held positions at both KPMG and PricewaterhouseCoopers in Lusaka, Zambia. His Ph.D. dissertation is titled “Mispricing of Initial Public Offerings: The Role of Accounting Information,” and examines how accounting information might affect the overpricing of IPO stocks at the end of the first day of trading.

Finance

Assistant professor Brett Olsen has been teaching at the University of Idaho for the past three years and boasts 13 years experience as a design and systems engineer for Caterpillar Inc. He received his B.S. in mechanical engineering from North Dakota State University, his MBA from Illinois State University, and his Ph.D. in finance from the University of Missouri-Columbia. Olsen’s interests include corporate governance, boards of directors and securities issuance.

Jeffery Stokes, associate professor, received his B.S. in agricultural economics from Purdue University, his M.S. in agricultural economics from University of Missouri-Columbia and his Ph.D. in agricultural and applied economics, financial economics from Texas A&M University. Stokes had taught at Pennsylvania State University for five years and joined UNIBusiness in fall 2009 to teach Principles of Real Estate and Real Estate Finance. His interests include credit risk measurement and migration, mortgage-backed securities and securitization.

Management

Mary Connerley, professor and head of the Department of Management, comes to UNIBusiness from Virginia Tech, where she served as director of the Business Diversity Center. Connerley, a native of Cedar Falls, earned her B.S. in psychology and M.S. in industrial relations at Iowa State University, and her Ph.D. in human resources management from the University of Iowa. Her research interests include human resource management, diversity and leadership.

Assistant professor Anju Mehta received her B.A. in psychology and music and M.I.B. in international business in India, and her M.S. and Ph.D. in management from Auburn University. Mehta previously headed the management department at a post-graduate college in India and was a visiting assistant professor at Florida A&M University. Mehta teaches Organizational Management and her interests include organization management, team dynamics, and organization analysis and change.

Assistant professor Nikhil Mehta received his B.A. and MBA in India, and his Ph.D. in management of information technology and innovation from Auburn University. Mehta came to UNIBusiness from Florida A&M University last year as a visiting professor and has now joined the permanent faculty. Mehta's interests include business alignment of knowledge management systems and pedagogical issues in IT education.
The College of Business Administration recognizes alumni and friends who made financial gifts to the College during the fiscal year July 1, 2009 - June 30, 2010. Your support is greatly appreciated.

Dietz Family Student Professional Development Fund

Gene and Mary Anne Dietz, of Farmington, Minn., have made another generous contribution to the University, this time founding a fund for student professional development. The Dietz Family Student Professional Development Fund provides support for students enrolled in the College of Business Administration. Examples of what funds could be used for include, but are not limited to, the Professional Readiness Program, study abroad and other international experiences, student internships, professional certification opportunities and other academic opportunities. The fund will make it financially possible for many students to gain a professional edge while still in school.

Gene (Marketing ’60) was a member of the Panther football team and is now semi-retired, working as a self-employed business consultant. He also serves on the UNI Foundation Board of Trustees.

This new gift is part of the University’s Imagine the Impact $150 million campaign. Prior to this gift, the Dietz’s had established the Eugene and Mary Anne Dietz Endowed Scholarship and the Eugene and Mary Anne Dietz Athletic Endowment Scholarship.

Jamar Thompson (Marketing ’10) received this scholarship to continue his education at UNI and pursue his master’s degree in communication studies.

J. Michael McBride Scholarship Awarded

This year’s J. Michael McBride Scholarship was awarded to Ashley Fewins (Accounting) from Mason City, Iowa. This scholarship pays for an accounting student’s tuition and fees, room and board, and books for all of her remaining years of study at UNI.

Marty Wartick, head of the Department of Accounting, said, “This is the most significant scholarship the department offers. A new recipient is a meaningful event for the department.”

Fewins started her fourth year in fall 2010. She plans to enter the Master of Accounting program after completing her undergraduate degree. She also is interested in music and accounting. She performs as principal clarinetist in the semi-professional orchestra affiliated with Wartburg College.

The scholarship is awarded to demonstrate McBride’s appreciation of the benefits of higher education and his desire to help students gain financial access to those benefits. The 1962 accounting graduate established the J. Michael McBride Accounting Scholarship in 1991.

“We all know what it costs to attend college these days. It’s a great feeling to be able to call a student and say, ‘I’m going to pay for your education.’ It’s beyond their comprehension that someone would give them a free ride,” he said.

Through the years, McBride has also given back to the University by serving as a UNI Foundation trustee and as a member of the Accounting Advisory Board. He and his wife, Ginny, also supported the University’s Students First campaign to help fund the McLeod Center on the UNI campus.

A Note from Director of Development Michelle Rourke

As director of development for UNIBusiness, I welcome the opportunity to thank you for your part in preparing the next generation of our alumni for success.

When I was a UNI student in the late ’70s, I was faced with the demands of a 40-minute daily commute to campus, being a homemaker and mom to two preschoolers, and holding a part-time job. Finding time to study was a challenge; extracurricular activities and study abroad opportunities were out of the question.

My tuition bill, less than $400 per semester, seemed monumental at the time. Today, tuition and fees for an Iowa resident in UNIBusiness are more than $8,000 per year ($14,116 with room and board). Textbook costs for one semester are frequently more than my 1980 tuition bill! I only imagine the stress of looking for that first job and facing years of payments on $25,740 of student loan debt, the average for today’s UNI graduates.

Fortunately, thanks to your generosity, far fewer undergraduates have to bear that financial burden and are able to land quality jobs through experiences you help fund. Your gifts for scholarships and to the Dean’s Fund for Excellence are just two of the many ways you can impact the lives — and futures — of today’s students.

Scholarships provide relief from high tuition bills, allowing students to focus more time on their education and less time on making ends meet. The Dean’s Fund for Excellence allows UNIBusiness to bring visiting scholars, guest lecturers and experiential learning opportunities to campus. It allows undergraduates to compete at national conferences and pursue professional certifications while still in school, and makes studying abroad and international internships a viable option for all UNIBusiness students.

Your generosity helps enhance students’ education and provide a professional edge far beyond what tuition can buy. Your input and experience make a difference! I look forward to meeting you, hearing your success story and how you would like to impact students’ lives. To learn more about supporting the College of Business Administration with your time, talents or treasure, please contact me at 800-782-9522, 319-273-4444 or michelle.rourke@uni.edu.

With sincere thanks,

Michelle Rourke (Marketing ’81)

Comming Full Circle

Derek Thoms (Economics ’02) resigned as UNIBusiness development director to take a job closer to his home in Marion, thus eliminating the long commute and enabling him to spend more time with his family. It was a difficult choice for him to leave behind what he considered his extended family — the alumni, friends and administration in the College and UNI Foundation, but he was able to make that leap knowing they would all be in good, capable and kind hands.

He knew this because his successor, Michelle Rourke (Marketing ’81), has a history that overlaps his.

“Michelle and I worked together for about a year and half [before she took a development job with Iowa Public Radio],” Thoms said. “I knew almost immediately that she was someone I could go to for help or advice. She really was a mentor to me when I first started.

“I couldn’t think of a better person for UNIBusiness to bring on board.”

While Thoms and Rourke are from different generations of Panthers, they share the many commonalities representative of UNIBusiness alumni: originally from Iowa, hard working and beneficiaries of a great education at UNI that served as a springboard for their careers.
UNIBusiness has a new, permanent way to recognize those who have made the Dean’s Fund for Excellence a focus of their giving. Members of the Dean’s Fund Leadership Circle give at least $1,000 each year specifically to the Dean’s Fund for Excellence. This unrestricted fund allows UNIBusiness students and faculty to take advantage of career-enhancing opportunities, to think outside the box with new initiatives and to supplement needs not fully funded by designated endowments, funds or budget allocations. Christine Bauman, associate professor of accounting, was named the PricewaterhouseCoopers Professor of Accounting in recognition of her outstanding scholarship, teaching and service to the profession.

Last year, in a grassroots effort, nine UNI accounting alumni who are currently partners at PricewaterhouseCoopers joined to establish a long-lasting sign of appreciation for the educators who influenced them at UNI by creating the PricewaterhouseCoopers Endowed Professorship in Accounting. These partner alumni are located across the U.S. and overseas: Steve Anderson, Washington, D.C.; Jeff Bjustrom, Minneapolis; Mike Brandmeyer, Los Angeles; Jill Hemphill, New York City; Dave Schroeder, Rosemount, Minn.; Pete Schlicksup, Tokyo; Tim Thronsdson, Raleigh, N.C.; Ellen Valde, Minneapolis; and Ken Wise, Bratislava, Slovakia.

“The Department of Accounting is proud of the success of our alumni at PricewaterhouseCoopers and honored that our relationship with the firm has been memorialized with the endowment of the PricewaterhouseCoopers Professorship in Accounting. This relationship dates back to the 1960s and continues today,” said Department Head Marty Wartick.

Bauman is a Certified Public Accountant and worked as a tax manager for Price Waterhouse in Pittsburgh, Penn. She has served on the IRS Practices and Procedure Committee of the AICPA and the Pre-certification Education Executive Committee of the AICPA. She is a former Trustee of the American Taxation Association.

Since arriving at UNI in 2005, Bauman has taught Income Tax, Advanced Tax, Advanced Tax Topics and Tax Research and Planning, and leads the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance (VITA) program. She currently serves as the director of the Master of Accounting program and faculty adviser to the Accounting Club, and her research focuses on income tax financial reporting effects, inventory, tax regulation and state tax matters.

Mark Bauman Trains with McGladrey Partners

McGladrey Professor of Accounting Mark Bauman spent a week over the summer participating in McGladrey’s Partners Only Training in Schaumburg, Ill. With numerous training sessions to choose from, Bauman focused his attention on those related to the courses he teaches, leaving with professional insights he can impart to his students in the classroom.

Bauman said he is very grateful to Doug Opheim (Accounting ’80) for arranging this exclusive opportunity.

The McGladrey Professor of Accounting was established at UNI in 2007; Bauman is the first person to hold this professorship.

Lindquist Awarded Accounting Alumni Fellowship

In fall 2009, UNI Business formally announced the endowment of the Accounting Alumni Faculty Fellowship and its first holder, Tim Lindquist. Establishment of this fellowship memorializes the special relationship between the Department of Accounting and its alumni. Lindquist, a professor of accounting, has been committed to students’ learning and success for nearly 20 years at UNI.

The Accounting Alumni Faculty Fellowship began with an innovative idea from the Accounting Advisory Council. In 2004, the council determined a portion of funds raised through the Accounting Alumni Annual Campaign would be designated to fund a faculty fellowship; thus, contributions from hundreds of alumni made the fellowship possible.

The fellowship criteria reflect UNI Business’ strong commitment to its teaching mission. The holder of the faculty fellowship is to be a professor who is giving of his or her time and is a positive influence in students’ development. The individual must be accessible to students beyond office hours and involved in accounting extracurricular activities.

Lindquist’s commitment to students comes through both in and out of the classroom. His classroom teaching is uniformly revered by accounting students, and while he expects a lot from them, they seem happy to deliver. Outside the classroom, he served as the Accounting Club faculty adviser from 2002 to 2007 and worked closely with the officers of that organization to establish some of the events that have since become annual traditions. He is the faculty adviser to Kappa Sigma fraternity. And, most importantly, he is one of those faculty members that students regularly seek out for advice and guidance.

UNI Business thanks the many accounting alumni who made the Accounting Alumni Faculty Fellowship possible and the current and past Advisory Council members who have continually aided in the advancement of the Department of Accounting.

Deloitte Fellowship Established

UNI Business alumni at Deloitte have established the Deloitte Fellowship. “We are overwhelmed by the generosity of our alumni at Deloitte. Having a Deloitte Fellowship is a tremendous advancement for the Department of Accounting,” said Marty Wartick, head of the department. “At a very practical level it helps us attract and retain high quality faculty, but at another level it elevates UNI within a unique set of institutions with public accounting firm-sponsored professorships and fellowships. We are especially grateful to Jeff Provost (Accounting ’84) who took a leadership role in making this happen.”

The fellowship was supported by the following alumni at Deloitte: Amber Carman, Omaha, Neb.; Matthew Davis, Chicago; Kim Felker, Omaha, Neb.; Jason Flinn, Minneapolis; Aaron Grundman, Milwaukee; Mick Kane, Chicago; Jeff Provost, Kansas City, Mo.; Christine Terhark, Des Moines, Iowa; and Debra Warner, Chicago.

UNI Business will name the faculty member to hold the prestigious Deloitte Fellowship before the end of the current academic year. Watch for an announcement at www.cba.uni.edu.

UNI Business thanks the generous alumni partners at Deloitte who established this fellowship and the Deloitte & Touche Foundation for the matching gifts.

A NATIONAL LEADER

The latest CPA exam results show that 67 percent of UNI Business students pass the CPA within a year of graduation, compared to the national average of 11 percent.

KEEPING OUR TRADITION ALIVE

This just in:

Deloitte.
Professional Readiness Program

At UNIBusiness our explicit educational intent is to develop graduates with a functional blend of three vital ingredients: essential business knowledge, traditional work values and contemporary professional skills. Our world-class faculty successfully delivers the essential business knowledge, and our high expectations further develop the traditional work values students bring to UNI. However, we see a void when it comes to the third ingredient. Many students come to us with limited professional exposure, lacking the assertiveness and confidence needed to build and manage successful careers. The Professional Readiness Program (PRP) addresses that void and equips our students with the contemporary professional skills necessary to hit the ground running as professionals when they graduate. Learn more about this innovative and ambitious program at www.cba.uni.edu/prp.

The PRP provides a wide variety of training sessions. Following are two distinct examples:

How to Improvise: Learning from a Theatre Pro

In the PRP workshop Improvisation for Business Majors, students explore how concentration, collaborative interaction and individual risk-taking are at the core of developing and using their creative impulses. UNI professor of theatre and workshop leader Gretta Berghammer trains students to work spontaneously and intuitively in unfamiliar contexts.

How to Manage your Career: Learning from Recent Alumni

Five recent UNIBusiness alumni returned to campus to speak to first-year students in the PRP’s All About Business course. Rochelle Dotzenrod (Real Estate and Finance ’04), assistant vice president at U.S. Bank in Minneapolis; Liz Dunshee (Economics ’03), senior associate, Fredrikson & Byron, P.A., in Minneapolis; Jeff Hassman (Management ’92), managing director of Cedar Valley Partners in Cedar Falls, Iowa; Katie Noonan (Marketing ’09), corporate and community relations coordinator for UNIBusiness; and Brian White (Accounting ’07, MAcc ’08), staff auditor, Ernst & Young, Des Moines, Iowa, joined their respective department heads for two days of classroom presentations and dialogue about potential careers in business and career management.
A distinguishing feature of the Professional Readiness Program is the direct involvement of UNIBusiness alumni, business partners and working professionals who assist with the development of young professionals by speaking to classes, leading training workshops, attending networking events and hosting student visits.

UNIBusiness thanks KEVIN STEERE AND SARA SCHROEDER FOR THE FOUNDATIONAL GIFT TO IMPLEMENT THE PROFESSIONAL READINESS PROGRAM AND THE INDIVIDUALS AND ORGANIZATIONS THAT KEEP IT GOING.
Advisory boards are crucial in helping UNIBusiness respond to challenges facing business education. Many accomplished professionals give their time to sit on a number of advisory boards, including the Dean’s Executive Advisory Board and boards that focus on accounting, finance, marketing and real estate, bringing their practical and intellectual expertise to the College. To make sure the student perspective is not lost in deliberations, UNIBusiness relies on input from its Presidents’ Council, comprised of elected leaders from every student organization in the College.

What Does the Presidents’ Council Do?

The Presidents’ Council allocates student travel funds and plans the annual graduation celebration, which brings together more than 500 students, parents, faculty, alumni, and business and community members to recognize and honor the next cohort of UNIBusiness alumni. They also take on projects throughout the year to address matters such as how to better integrate all UNIBusiness students into the College and expose them to all its activities and opportunities.

While this group has a lot of fun, members also tackle some big and important issues that affect them and the thousands of business students at UNI as the dean’s advisory board.

“Over the years, the College administration has come to rely on this group more and more heavily for important decisions.”

– Steve Corbin
Presidents’ Council adviser and interim head of the Department of Marketing

The students’ involvement and straightforward manner were imperative when the Presidents’ Council took on the matter of supplemental tuition for business students. When the UNI president authorized the College to explore that option, the council was given the chance to nix the idea before it went any further.

The idea was that if students were to pay supplemental tuition, the go-ahead would have to come from the student leaders.

After the council members intently considered the reasons why supplemental tuition might be necessary to maintain the College’s reputation, they returned from their discussion willing to offer support — although not unconditionally. The group was involved in every major decision as the proposal was developed, from how much each student would pay to how the revenue would be spent. Today, the co-presidents of the council serve on the audit committee, which ensures the supplemental revenues are used in accordance to the proposal that was presented to and approved by the Board of Regents, State of Iowa, in December 2008.

“In our proposal, we followed exactly the pattern presented to us by the Presidents’ Council,” said Leslie Wilson, UNIBusiness associate dean. “I believe debate was limited because the students had already asked the hard questions and offered a sound prescription.”

Where Are The Past Presidents Now?

UNIBusiness recently caught up with a few of the past presidents, curious about how they remembered the contribution they’d made. We discovered their council experience had given them just as much as they gave back.

“Part of the joy of this position was selling the school, the opportunities to learn outside the classroom and eventually, working as a change agent on proposed changes in how we did things within the organization,” said Ryan Wilson.

For many, being a part of the team that pulled the annual Graduation Celebration together opened their eyes to the level of planning required to make a memorable event of that magnitude.

“Little did I realize the extent of the processes and logistics that it took to provide this annual inspirational event,” said Pernell Cezar. But each year, with guidance from College faculty and staff, they pull it off.

“If you are organized, you are prepared to handle just about anything,” said Ellen Schiltz.

“Dr. [Steve] Corbin always said, ‘if you fail to plan, you plan to fail,’ and it was definitely true when it came to a meeting, project or big event in Presidents’
Council,” said Grayson Jones. And Stephanie Wesely added that as a leader, you can’t be afraid to step up and take on new challenges.

When a group of leaders comes together, some might anticipate struggles for control and potential conflict. But that’s not how Katie Noonan recalls it. “I learned the importance of adapting to and interacting with different people,” she said. “In my experience, by the time UNIBusiness students are seniors, they spend the majority of their time with people in the same major. Presidents’ Council gave me perspective on the views of students other than marketing majors and reminded me that a business is also run by people in different areas: finance, marketing, management, accounting, etc.”

Ben Loss and Aaron Berdofe also found advantages networking with professionals, college administrators, faculty and staff and their peers, valuing the professional perspective of the UNIBusiness Advisory Board members and recognizing the rarity of an accomplished mentor willing to invest his or her time in them.

Current Co-President April Pearson echoes her predecessors’ appreciation for the opportunity to serve on the council. “I feel very honored to be part of the Presidents’ Council,” she said. “I feel it’s very important to know what is going on in the school and classes that you are attending. To be involved improves every aspect of my learning experience and helps the College.”

Focus on Alumni

Sally Mainquist (Accounting ’80) had noticed a lot of purple and gold around the Twin Cities — and not all of it was a nod to the Vikings.

Mainquist, who joined the Twin Cities-based Certes Financial Pros in 1999 and assumed the role of president and CEO in May 2007, had come across not only a lot of University of Northern Iowa alumni in the area, but a lot of fellow accounting grads.

Soon she was thinking, “Wouldn’t it be nice to pull everyone together and set up some networking time with each other, just help everyone socialize.”

Thus, after a small gathering at her home, Mainquest, Kip Elliot (’89), Mike Mrosko (’92), Steve Ragaller (’80) and Ellen Valde (’85) formed the Twin Cities UNI Accounting Alumni Group in December 2008. As steering committee members, their mission — often executed over conference calls to accommodate busy schedules — was to plan events and bring other accounting alumni together for reminiscing, socializing and, possibly, professional networking.

“We know the quality of a UNI accounting grad and might want to hire each other,” Mainquist said. “You know these people are good people. You were trained the same way.”

The membership list started with a call from Mainquist to the UNI Alumni Association. She received about 200 names, and the now 300-member strong group is a mix of young and old, all of whom live in the Twin Cities area.

Mainquist’s advice to others who’d like to form a group where they live is to become a champion in that city.

“Certes sponsors a lot of events, and I don’t have a problem creating the invitations and managing those details,” she said. “You have to have a champion who’s willing to do that.”

She also advises to keep any sort of event program simple, short and sweet. “We don’t want it to become something people are afraid to come to. There’s no formal program; it’s social.”

On Sept. 15, the Twin Cities UNI Accounting Alumni Group gathered at Target Field, “Home of the Twins” and workplace of ’89 alumnus and Twins Senior Vice President of Business Administration Kip Elliot. The group coordinates and hosts social events in and around the Twin Cities, including at Summit Brewery, where ’95 alumna Kelly Larson is CFO.

Hong Kong MBA Graduation

UNI Provost Gloria Gibson presided over the Hong Kong MBA commencement ceremony for those graduating fall 2008 through spring 2010. The Hong Kong MBA program began as an innovative way to provide solid, first-hand international exposure for the UNIBusiness faculty and has grown into a premier educational program in its own right.

On Last Year’s Cover

When we interviewed Joseph M. Otting (Management ’82) for the cover story of last year’s UNIBusiness, he was the vice chairman at US Bank, where he managed the commercial banking group for the country’s fifth largest bank. In late October 2010, Otting was named president and CEO of OneWest Bank.

Otting also will join OneWest Bank’s board.

OneWest Bank is one of the largest banks in southern California with 82 locations throughout the region. It is a diversified financial institution focused on delivering personalized, relationship-based services to consumers and businesses.

Banking Power Player

Mary Coffin (Accounting ’83) has been named a Power Player on one of US Banker magazine’s “Top 5 Banking Teams.” Coffin is executive vice president of loan servicing for Wells Fargo Home Mortgage. Wells Fargo & Co. was recognized in the October 2010 issue as having one of the top female executive teams in banking.

Coffin also was recognized in the 2006 issue of UNIBusiness “Women on Top of Accounting” article. Read archived issues of UNIBusiness at www.cba.uni.edu, under Alumni & Friends.

It takes a lot of hard work to become a professional.

Sometimes you need a little help.

Our students have the heart for success, and they’re willing to work hard, but there are costs. Spending every Saturday in a CFA seminar means working the third shift all week long. An international experience means finding a third job to pay for the airfare. Winning a national business competition requires long hours of preparation. Building a professional portfolio costs time, money and sleep.

Your contribution to the Dean’s Fund for Excellence can buy the CFA seminar books, purchase an airline ticket, or put a group of students in front of an executive coach.
