Dollars Down the Drain

Please be careful to print only what you need! Printing at Library workstations is funded through the student technology fee, and money spent on unnecessary printing is therefore not available for other things such as electronic journals and electronic books. Please print only one copy of a document. Do not print copies of documents that are longer than 40 pages. Instead, read such documents online, copy them to your flash drive, or email them to yourself. Photocopy machines should be used to make multiple copies. If you don't know where your document has printed or if it has printed, ask for help at the reference desk before sending another print command. Thank you!

Academic OneFile

Need more sources for end-of-semester projects? Academic OneFile may have everything you need. You can look up peer-reviewed, full-text articles from the world's leading journals and reference sources. "With millions of articles available in both PDF and HTML full-text, researchers are able to find accurate information quickly." Choose Academic OneFile from the Databases A-Z list and start searching! Or, are you stumped in your research? Help from expert librarians is available. Click on Ask Us! for details.

Fines

We know fines are unpopular, but they're necessary as an incentive for library users to return material on time. This is important because some items are needed by several people at once. You can avoid fines by keeping track of the due dates. Due dates are stamped on a slip just inside the front cover of each item. You can also monitor your checked out items by logging into "My Library Account" and renew most items if you still need them. If you have any questions about your library account, please contact the Circulation desk at 319-273-2462 or email libcirc@uni.edu.
