Student Impact

“UNI ScholarWorks has allowed my research to be viewed by people from around the world. Having my research available for professors at prospective colleges for graduate studies has helped immensely when meeting for interviews as they have had a chance to view what I’ve produced...”

-Lyn Tackett, undergraduate student

“Website: scholarworks.uni.edu

“Without this tool, my work would have gone unseen.”

-Megan Vogt-Kostner, graduate student

“UNI ScholarWorks is fundamental in showcasing the research and accomplishments of UNI students.”

- Dr. Julie Kang, Department of Biology

UNI ScholarWorks is an online tool, maintained by the Rod Library, used for collecting, preserving, and providing access to UNI works by students, faculty, and staff. Most works hosted on UNI ScholarWorks are available to anyone with internet access.

Open Access means that the work of the UNI community is available, at no cost, to contribute to solutions of pressing societal and scientific challenges.

UNI ScholarWorks launched in February of 2015 and has grown to include 26,468 works with over 2 million global downloads. The works have been accessed by 38,459 institutions and read by people in over 226 countries and territories. UNI’s repository averages about 3,000 downloads per day, worldwide.

What can you do after your work is in UNI ScholarWorks?
- Place the URL to your work on your resume or graduate school application
- Point to your works in UNI ScholarWorks during interviews

What can be submitted:

Undergraduate Students: Honors theses, Research in the Capitol posters, SURP Symposium posters, Economics Capstone papers in Major Themes in Economics, Jepson Conference entries, and select class projects (posters, books, videos, etc.)

Graduate Students: Theses/Dissertations, research papers, Annual Graduate Student Symposium posters and PowerPoints, and select class projects (posters, books, videos, etc.)

All student works made available in UNI ScholarWorks require department, unit, or individual faculty review.
