Dr. Shields

By Dr. Allan Shields

(Editor's Note: Dr. Allan Shields, Dean of the College of Humanities and Fine Arts and professor of philosophy, came to UNI in the summer of 1968 from San Diego State College where he was first chairman of the department of philosophy. Dr. Shields has enjoyed a many-faceted career as professor of philosophy, music critic, seaman, ranger-naturalist, psychologist, and violinist. A Phi Beta Kappa member, he graduated from the University of California at Berkeley and earned both his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees at the University of Southern California.)

The new university organization of colleges represents an effort on the part of the faculty and administration to create a sensible alignment of subject matter fields, faculty professions, and major student interests. It has been well publicized that there are four undergraduate colleges in the new organization, Business and Behavioral Sciences, Education, Natural Sciences and the College of Humanities and Fine Arts. Subsequent articles, I am told, will describe the other three colleges, and so I can limit myself. A fifth college, the graduate college, incorporates at the graduate level courses of study drawn from the four undergraduate colleges.

What has not been so well publicized is that no administrative alignment of subject matter fields can possibly make complete cognitive sense. For instance, in the new structure, there is no department of humanities in the university or in the College of Humanities and Fine Arts, though there are courses in humanities. This program is staffed with faculty from two different colleges and at least four different departments of knowledge. Depending on the conception of humanities used, it is also possible to show that some elements of courses in the behavioral sciences are humanistic in their meaning, and that some courses in the humanities are clearly oriented toward natural science objectives. We could go on. Dance, a fine art, is housed under the administrative heading of physical education, and marching band, a physical activity, is housed under the music department. The conclusion to be drawn from the apparent misorganization is that it probably doesn't matter very much in the long run just how departments of knowledge are administered and staffed, so long as their subject contents be available to the students in an orderly sequence and through regular offerings, and that the faculty be professionally prepared to offer instruction.

College of Humanities and Fine Arts

There is a good deal of sentimentalism about the direct advantages for students of music rubbing shoulders with students of theater, and, similarly, of how important it is for the community of scholars that the professor of English literature have constant dialogical contact with an historian. Patterns of higher education clearly represent the thesis that almost any arrangement works to some extent, and that probably the workability is not a function of any arrangement.

Prima facie, it is sensible to draw the arts together under one faculty and administrative tent, and it is equally sensible to show that the humanities are much more closely related in their meaning and significance to the arts than to, say, physical education, industrial arts, or to some professional program, such as education. However, as soon as you say this, you will find yourself in lively debate with representatives of these very professions and scholarly orientations who may argue the opposite case. Indeed, you will now find artists arguing for the inclusion of a physicist in the art department, though I am not aware that any department of physics has requested an artist on their faculty.

The academic structure at UNI is simple in outline. Presidential authority is invested in the vice-president for academic affairs, whose authority transmits to the dean of each of the undergraduate colleges, thence, through the department heads within the colleges, to the faculty. Professional direction and authoritativeness are transmitted by a reverse process. In the College of Humanities and Fine Arts the following departments are represented: art, English language and literature, philosophy-religion, foreign languages, speech, and music.

Roughly one-third of the entire faculty in the University teaches in the College of Humanities and Fine Arts, and every student in the University, at some important points in his academic career, makes profound contact with some aspect of the course offerings. The reason this latter can be stated so succinctly is the fact that one of the primary objectives of each department in this college is to incorporate courses in general education, sometimes known as a core curriculum. The courses in humanities, writing composition, basic literature, certain music, art, and speech courses, all grant this kind of credit to students in the University. Graduation requires a familiar quantity of such intellectual exposures.

Perhaps not so well known are the programs in speech pathology with professional objectives, preparation for work in theater, special programs for teaching of English to the foreign born, and a growing, ambitious program in a variety of foreign languages -- French, German, Spanish, Norwegian, Russian, and others—all taught to the foreign born!

Each department takes pride in certain aspects of its individual offerings that make it distinctive. The foreign languages faculty is anxious to improve the teaching of foreign languages in the schools of Iowa. The department of English language and literature has for decades stood for excellence in literary comprehension and related language skills. It is well known through the nation that UNI (formerly known by more familiar names) has practiced the belief that the liberal arts tradition should be the core of preparation for teachers, and this tradition is being continued. Though "nonteaching" programs are more and more common, most faculty and administrators agree that this need not lead to relaxing of commitments to the preparation of the highest quality of teachers.

With the advent of the new university structure has come the excitement and ferment of ideas that would lead to new programs, new courses, and additional achievements.

New Department Established

The most recent major change has been the establishment of the department of philosophy and religion. Though this department lacks a major in philosophy or religion, plans are underway to offer one or both majors in the future. Some new faculty have been added and, once beyond the austerity biennium, it is expected that additional faculty will be brought onto the campus. New courses are being discussed and designed at this time and will eventually see the light of day both in a catalog and, more important, in a classroom. The entire college, in fact the entire university, is actively engaged in a constant search for long-range ideas for curriculum changes, and for the buildings that will complement those changes. Though the structure of the college and university has been recently set, there is no assumption in such planning of inflexibility, or that any changes in the future must be built on the premise of this structure. The future is open.

It is predictable that there will be important innovations in the methods of teaching in various departments and courses, that the natural development of some departments will produce additional subdivisions of departments such as specific departments for the foreign languages, and perhaps the invention of departments not now common, such as the department of humanities itself. It is possible that the faculty may request a reorganization of the arts in order to strengthen the offerings in the performing and fine arts where professional objectives may be primary, such as one would find in a conservatory, leading to a redefined degree such as the Bachelor of Music or the Bachelor of Fine Arts or Performing Arts and could conceivably include music, dance, theater, painting, ceramics, sculpture, photography, jewelry and crafts, architecture and probably other permutations and arrangements.

There is talk of new programs and curricula under the heading of "Area Studies." Specialties of this kind might include Aesthetic Studies, Linguistic Studies, European Studies, American Studies, South American Studies, African Studies, Asian Studies, and so on.

It is literally quite impossible even to list the multiple services performed by these faculty people for the community of Iowa in such a short statement. Every department now offers special programs, and that list, too, is extensive. Through extension services, through professional contributions, such as displaying works of art, lecturing to various groups, writing in professional journals and elsewhere, by the writing of books, in off-campus time for the most part, by self-instruction and professional improvement, and in other ways, the faculty contributes to the cultural advance of this country and will continue to do so.

As a newcomer to this institution and region it may be appropriate for me to make a few personal observations. First, after studying the personnel records of the faculty and after a year of acquaintance with them personally and professionally, it is evident that the work load of this faculty is so excessive that it absolutely precludes the possibility of their performing to their top professional proficiency and potential. There is a great deal in the way of creative power waiting to be released when teaching loads are reduced, sabbatical leaves provided, and when professional development leaves may be continued in proper proportion to allow more of the faculty to do creative work. Second, it is impressive to see how many really gifted students study on this campus, and how fine a program already is offered to them. Third, this faculty and administration takes justifiable pride in the advances it has made at the graduate level with the masters degree programs in many departments, and with a new specialist degree in education program midway to the doctorate. And finally, fourth, it has been my privilege to have worked this year in close cooperation with the deans of the other colleges, the dean of undergraduate instruction, the registrar, vice-presidents and the president. It is no exaggeration to say that, despite the wholly inadequate budget support recently granted UNI by the legislature of Iowa, the remarkable achievements and promise of this institution are in large part the result of their imaginative leadership.

(Editor's Note: This is the first in a series of articles to be written about the four undergraduate colleges at UNI—the College of Education, the College of Natural Science, the College of Business and Behavioral Science, and the College of Humanities and Fine Arts—by their respective deans.)

What Became of the Editors?

By Mrs. Barbara Lounsberry

(Editor's Note: The Alumnus received a fine response to a questionnaire sent last year to former editors of campus publications. We regret that space requirements do not permit us to include all responses in the following article.)

Along with football heroes and college queens, UNI's newspaper and yearbook editors throughout the years have often been among the well-known figures on campus. As reporters of the crises and issues of their times, they will perhaps be among the most widely remembered personalities of years gone by at UNI.

What becomes of editors when their battered typewriters and blue pencils are exchanged for the cap and gown? Do they go to journalistic seed or do they soar to new heights of literary achievement?

To answer these questions, The Alumnus staff searched out the editors in their retreats in such exotic places as Rio de Janeiro, Pago Pago, and even Cedar Falls, Iowa, and asked them what they've done since graduation and what it was like in those golden days on the Old Gold, NormalEyte, College Eye, and now Northern Iowan. While we learn of their exploits we'll take a look through their eyes at the "hot stories" and "scoops" since 1907.

"The matter of football was the most controversial question for the 1907 NormalEyte and might be remembered by alumni of that first decade of the twentieth century" suggests Fred Cram, 1907 NormalEyte editor.

"Intercollegiate football was discontinued at the century due to the bad reputation of our men when they visited other campuses," Cram remembers. After the loss was bemoaned for several years in the newspaper, the game was restored in 1908.

Name Change a Big Issue

Cram also recalls another big issue of the day — changing the name and status of the institution from normal school to teachers college. “As a matter of fact,” says Cram, “the work being done at the institution had been of college rank for some years, and the B. A. degree had been awarded in a few cases. There was divided opinion on the faculty in respect to the change in name. Professor D. Sands Wright, the oldest teacher on campus, remarked in chapel that ‘school’ is a broader and better term than ‘college.’ President Seerley was more or less lukewarm on the subject. But the matter came to a head in the General Assembly in 1909 and the change to Iowa State Teachers College was made.”

Cram, who is the oldest living former president of the Iowa State Education Association now lives at the Mayflower Home in Grinnell, Iowa. After leaving the Normal School in 1908, he turned his face toward Mason City where he served as head of the normal department at Memorial University there as elementary principal and head of the Normal Training High School. In 1920, after a stint as superintendent of schools for Cerro Gordo County, Cram returned to UNI to offer his talents to the Extension Service, to the University Archives, and finally as an emeritus professor.

The second decade of the twentieth century saw dancing create quite a furor. Dr. Milton F. Methfessel, editor of the paper during the 1918-1919 school year raised the question in his editorials as to “whether dancing should be permitted on campus.” Dancing finally won out. But three years later, reports Clyde Brooks, the 1921-22 editor, the subject was still an issue. Brooks now resides in Iowa Falls.

Another issue of 1918, corroborated by Dr. Methfessel’s wife and 1920-21 Old Gold editor, Carol Stone Methfessel, concerned the grading system. “Students,” according to the Methfessel’s, “wanted their grades issued specifically, not simply pass or fail” — an interesting turn-about to the present day with UNI answering current student clamor by initiating a pass-fail grading system last spring.

The Methfessel’s, perhaps meeting in some romantic copyroom in Gilchrist or at Holst’s Printing Company, were married in 1922, and have lived most of the succeeding years in Southern California. Dr. Methfessel served as associate professor of psychology at the University of Iowa and then as full professor at the University of Southern California until his retirement in June of 1967. Dr. Methfessel died in March during the flooding in California. Mrs. Methfessel, also a teacher, has worked with minority group housing in the Watts district of Los Angeles.

“Teaching in Watts was an experience,” she reports. “My predecessor in teaching had been run out. But I got along nicely by being flexible and laughing when things I was not used to had to be dealt with. After all, ‘kids are kids the world over.’” Mrs. Methfessel resides at 907 South Catalina, Redondo Beach, Calif.

Twenties Came Roaring In

The twenties then came roaring in. The Reverend Paul R. Brown, College Eye editor in 1925-26, reports another facet of the editorship befitting the times.

“In those great days students who wanted to publish and edit the College Eye waged an election campaign, and ran the paper as a personal commercial project. I talked John Poland (B.A., 1926) who was then teaching at “Buck Creek,” into being business manager. I then ran the election, and we won. He sold enough ads to pay for the costs of putting out the paper, and he and I got a neat profit of, I think $890 each.”

Reverend Brown also remembers a free airplane ride he and his ingenious business manager arranged in 1925 in exchange for a free ad in the paper. In 1925, this was quite an adventure. The only letter to the editor that he remembers came from a lady faculty member who wrote “I think the ads in the paper are just fine.”

Reverend Brown joined the Methodist ministry and continued his journalistic endeavors by writing and publishing a weekly church paper. His address is 610 North 3rd St., La-Crescent, Minn.

Thirties Were Quiet

Of the thirties, Robert Cunningham, originator of the "Welcome Travelers" radio program on station WBBM in Chicago and 1932-33 editor, writes, "the natives were quiet—remember it was during the depression." But as the years went on issues and big stories did emerge. One of the biggest news items, according to Leslie H. Burch, editor from 1935-36, was the collapse of the college stadium in a wind storm. The present stadium was soon erected and that was the year ISTC joined the North Central Athletic Conference. Cunningham is now director of public relations for the Chicago Association of Commerce and Industry and resides at 201 West Station, Barrington, Ill. Burch, coordinator of Diversified Cooperative Training Programs for Highlands County, Florida, lives at Road 3, Box 1480, Avon Park, Fla.

Other controversial issues appearing in the pages of the Eyes of the thirties concerned the rule of compulsory attendance of classes, student campaigns for courses in family and marriage, and complaints about women's dormitory hours. On the subject of compulsory attendance Ruth Culbertson Jordan, editor from 1938-39 and wife of James Jordan, her predecessor on the paper, writes that the "students were trying to get optional attendance to improve some dull courses." Whether or not this objective was accomplished is not known but optional attendance was finally accepted.

Mrs. Jordan has managed to keep busy following those days on the College Eye by "teaching, editing, raising children, working with handicapped children, and now trying to keep pace as an administrator's wife and babysitter of grandchildren." Her husband and co-editor, James Jordan, received UNI's Alumni Achievement Award in June for his outstanding contribution to college public relations. Jordan is now beginning a new career with the Ford Foundation as a project specialist in education. They make their home at 1917 Arden Drive, Bloomington, Ind.

During the war years of the forties, student's minds were on more crucial matters than local and campus issues. Don Templeton, Eye editor from 1940-41, sums it up well: "Controversial issues? We couldn't even fabricate them."

However Templeton does remember the streamlining of the college newspaper. "Streamlining was new in the late '30's and our layout was patterned after a Glendale, Calif., paper that was one of the first dailies to modernize. We came out once a week and were one of the few papers, daily or college, in that day to use color. The flag and Tutor Timetable calendar head were run in one color for a term and then changed."

"Having seen an old file before the alumni luncheon in 1967," Templeton comments, "I think they still look better typographically than most of today's college papers. However I must admit that today's papers have more exciting content."

Fired with the spirit of journalism, Templeton joined the reporting staff of the Waterloo Daily Courier following graduation and then went on to teach journalism and English at West Junior and Senior High Schools in Waterloo and at Illinois State University's high school at Normal, Ill. He is currently assistant to the vice president of academic affairs at Illinois State and dean of faculties. His home is at 304 South Grove St., Normal, Ill.

Seeds of Present Controversies

With the decade of the fifties came the start of controversies now familiar to us all. Jerry Cias, College Eye editor 1954-55, reports "student apathy and need for real student government" as his favorite editorial topics. "We seemed also to be concerned about our faculty 'advisors' and their attitudes," he remembers. "We wanted a more 'liberal arts' orientation in the curriculum and were concerned with the provincialism of ISTC." Other editors report such issues as academic freedom and "panty raids" as big items of the day. Cias has gone on to become director of student activities at Sierra College in California and lives at 5105 Whitney Blvd., Sunset Whitney Ranch.

Part of the fun of being the newspaper or yearbook editor seemed to be evading the campus policeman who locked the building doors at night always before the editors had met their deadlines. Paul Smith, Old Gold editor 1955-56, reports his ingenious solution: "In the daytime the darkroom was a photo lab; after midnight it was a place to proof galleys, modify pagination and build the name index." Other, less imaginative editors confessed to sitting in restaurant booths until the wee hours of the morning. Another California resident, Smith is a marine biologist and resides at 1645 Noma Lane, Encinatas, Calif.

In 1957 the famous Old Gold Beauty Pageant was initiated under the editorship of Sally Horn Wasser and color was used for the first time in the yearbook. Mrs. Wasser took graduate work in mathematics at Colorado State College after leaving UNI and studied journalism at the University of Chicago. She is currently kindergarten teacher in a private kindergarten in Pago Pago, Samoa, and reports the job as "quite a challenge for a former mathematician-journalist, but I enjoy it." Letters to Mrs. Wasser should be sent to the department of education, Pago Pago Tutuila, American Samoa.

The editors of the sixties don't have to strain much to remember the issues during their terms of office and there seem to have been a million of them. Robert Davis, College Eye editor 1966-67, names controversies over "President Maucker's portrait, the placement of the new University Union, homosexuality, the Controversial Speakers Program, anti-war statements, women's dormitory hours, and even Christmas vacation" as just a few. He also recalls one of the most unusual student government campaigns in UNI's history during which the late campus alligator won some 600 votes for the office of Student Senate president.

Davis is currently teaching at Washington High School in Cedar Rapids, lives at 4558 Mount Vernon Road, SE, and is working toward his master's degree. In spite of the headaches and hard work of being a college editor, his reply, when asked if he would do it over again, is typical of many of the editors: "I'd be back tomorrow if they would have me!"

And, from the office of the editor of the Brazil Herald, in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil's only English-language daily newspaper, come the thoughts of one who truly put his college experience to work. W. F. (Bill) Williamson, Jr., College Eye editor 1952-53, after listing his numerous current activities and responsibilities remarks:

"And so I frequently recall with nostalgia the days when editing the (then) TC paper competed only with classes for time and meant only a couple of weekly trips down to the Holst printshop, and business worries were limited only to selling a few ads and signing up a few hundred subscribers."

Maucker Receives Travel Grant

President and Mrs. J. W. Maucker left Cedar Falls July 14 for three months of world travel provided by a special Danforth Travel Grant which Maucker received last fall.

Maucker is one of 20 top university administrators in the nation to receive the grant which, according to the Danforth Foundation that awarded it, is designed "to provide opportunities for outstanding college and university administrators to enlarge their perspectives of current and future education issues and to renew their inner resources for continued leadership in higher education."

Program participants must leave their own campus and community for the period of the leave which may vary from two to four months.

The UNI President told the State Board of Regents in June that he planned to use the initial stage of his leave for world travel and to finish it visiting colleges and universities in this country.

"I want to pick out some topnotch institutions, some with student bodies much more select than ours, some with student bodies like ours, some with per-pupil cost running much higher than ours, some with per-pupil cost about like ours and some with those much less than ours," Maucker told the Board.

He said he wanted to find out directly from "the horses' mouths" just how other schools go about getting staff and deciding on promotion and salary, just how they determine their costs and what they do about high costs when they run into them.

"I'd like to know what increment these schools make in the knowledge demonstrated by students from freshman to senior year on standardized examinations and similar information," Maucker added.

Maucker said he thinks such information can be extremely helpful in planning and in convincing faculty and townspeople and others as to the wisdom or unwisdom of various procedures and policies.

He and Mrs. Maucker watched the Apollo II moon shot at Cape Kennedy on July 16 as guests of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA).

Following the moon shot they planned to visit friends in Kingston, Jamaica, and then go to Washington, D.C., to secure information concerning the colleges and universities he plans to visit in November.

From Washington, they planned to go to Copenhagen, via New York. After three weeks in Scandinavia, they planned to go to Athens by way of Munich and a small town in Austria where they were going to visit some people who were on the UNI foreign language staff this last year.

"After Greece we will jump to the Orient visiting Bangkok, Hong Kong and Japan," Maucker told the Regents. "We expect to spend about three weeks in Japan and then return to Cedar Falls about mid-October."

He said he planned to spend about two weeks in Cedar Falls before beginning his tour of campuses.

Dr. Daryl Pendergraft, executive dean and vice president for student personnel and field services at UNI, was in charge of the president's office from July 14 to mid-August. Dr. William C. Lang, vice president for academic affairs who served as co-director of the UNI Social Science Summer Seminar in Europe, will be in charge of the president's office until Maucker returns in November.

UNI Has a Birthday

UNI celebrated its second birthday July 1 with a gala party at the University Union. President J. W. Maucker, shown here sporting a party hat, and Mrs. Maucker hosted the festivities which drew over 300 students, faculty and townspeople.

Named College President

Dr. Norbert K. Baumgart, B.A. '54, M.A. '58, was inaugurated as the 10th president of Northern State College, Aberdeen, S.D., April 25, in the Aberdeen Civic Arena.

The 36-year-old Baumgart, who assumed the presidency of Northern State July 1, replaces J. Howard Kramer, 65, who will return to South Dakota State University next Sept. 1 as professor of education after having reached the mandatory retirement age for administrators.

The new NSC president was formerly dean of students at Mankato, Minn., State College.

"The Regents of Education feel South Dakota is fortunate in obtaining Dr. Baumgart for the Northern State post," said Charles Burke, Pierre, regents president.

"He is young and possesses fine credentials as well as a background that includes both teaching and administrative experience. The board was fortunate in having a choice of well-qualified candidates and the cooperation of a hard-working and conscientious screening committee representing Northern State."

Dr. Baumgart will take the administrative reins of one of South Dakota's rapidly expanding institutions of higher education," Burke added, "and we are confident he will bring to the post both the vigor of a young educator and the good judgment of an experienced administrator."

In accepting his new post, Dr. Baumgart commented: "I consider this a real challenge. Northern State is a fine school with a rich tradition and an exciting potential. I am impressed with the physical facilities and the community support, as well as with the faculty and student body."

Dr. Baumgart

Dr. Baumgart is a native of Kampsville, Ill. He was awarded his Doctor of Education degree in student personnel administration, guidance, and educational psychology at Indiana University in 1960.

He began his administrative and teaching career as dean of students at Wilmington College in 1960. Prior to that time he served as a public school relations counselor at UNI and as a counselor in the counseling center at Indiana University.

President Baumgart is the author of several published articles dealing with higher education and student affairs.

He is married to the former Bernita Riedemann, Elem. '55, of Primghar, Iowa, and they have three children, Tim, age 12; Susan, age nine; and Jean, age six.

Northern Iowa's head football coach Stan Sheriff opens his tenth season this fall, sporting an impressive 57-27-2 record.

A Decade With Stan

Impressive 57-27-2 Record

This is football's centennial year, the 100th anniversary of the college game. It is a special time for collegiate athletics.

UNI's Panthers hope to celebrate in fashion and leading the party parade is the defensive unit where nine starters return. The class of the outfit is up front in the line.

Coach Stan Sheriff, heading into his 10th season, likes the look up front. "Our front is very strong," he said. "We have veterans back at every spot, we have depth there and we have leadership."

Defense, in Sheriff's eyes, will have to carry the load early in the year. "We lost an awful lot in the offensive line plus the quarterback and its going to take time for that offense to jell. We're hoping our defense can get us the ball in good field position to give the offense a better shot at moving it."

Sheriff sat in this same boat two seasons ago, with a veteran defense and a new offense. The formula that states you have to have a good defense to be a big winner was true. UNI posted a 7-3 record, missed the conference title by one point though they struggled on offense much of the year.

Last year the offense was the veteran group and UNI posted a 5-5 mark after a 5-1 start. Depth, an annual problem, was likely the major cause for the tailspin.

That front seven on defense is the key. It's headed by guards Dan Goddard, an all-NCC selection last year, Jim Rudd and Skip Bellock. The tackles will be Larry Green and Doug Walter. The linebackers, possibly the best position of all, are headed by all-NCC John Williams, flanked by Dennis Meyer, and Dick Bergstrom with veterans Mike Filer and Rex Perisho also on hand.

The offense is a muddled picture as pre-season drills open. Sheriff has 10 quality backs and the starting lineup could come up in any of a multitude of combinations. "I just wouldn't predict a thing right now," he added. "When you have all of your starting backs back and still are not sure, you have to feel good. That means the competition will be fierce. Veterans Dennis Kettner, Jim Wagner and Roger Jones will have to hustle. We've already made one switch, bringing Jones back inside with Larry Skartvedt set at the flanker spot. Someone has to move over and we have some new faces that could go all the way to the top of the list."

Who replaces Phil Schooley? Sheriff has four young men shooting for the spot with transfer Bill Raun the number one man going in. He's a junior and the oldest of the group.

The biggest problem area is the line on offense where four starters from 1968 are gone. Back are end Randy Ruisch, tackle Larry Rater and guard Rick Hodam, all on the left side of the line.

For the first time in years freshmen are eligible in the North Central Conference but Sheriff said he'd be highly surprised if any of the 17 yearlings earned a starting spot in the first game . . . and disappointed if several of them did not letter the first year. He calls it the finest group of freshmen he's had.

Will the Panthers be tough? They have to be to stay with the company in the NCC. North Dakota State is the defending conference and national champion and returns its entire starting backfield. South Dakota U. was ranked eight in the nation a year ago and has its starting backfield back. UNI plays them on successive weekends, the Coyotes at home for Homecoming and NDSU at Fargo the following week.

The 1969 schedule:

Sept. 13	at Northern Michigan
20	Central Michigan
27	Augustana
Oct. 4	at South Dakota State
11	at Drake
18	at Morningside
25	South Dakota U.
Nov. 1	at North Dakota State
8	North Dakota U.
15	Western Illinois

Year of Achievement

The 1968-69 athletic year at Northern Iowa was a sweet blending of individual achievement and team togetherness. It paid off on both sides.

In case you missed it, the Panthers won seven North Central Conference titles, two of them of the unofficial variety, and saw seven individuals step into the forefront.

The Panthers won official NCC titles in wrestling, basketball (tied for the title), indoor track, outdoor track and tennis. They won both unofficial crowns in swimming and gymnastics. In addition, they placed second in cross country, baseball and golf and tied for third in football.

Yet, the individuals had a heyday. Here's a short recount of the seven outstanding performances:

Wrestling

Kent Osboe, heavyweight wrestler, won his second straight national college division title, scored the vital pin to win the conference title and led UNI to a third place finish in the nationals. He was selected to compete in the East-West All-Star meet after finishing sixth in the university division nationals. His record: 29-3.

Marv Reiland, 130-pound junior wrestler, won his second straight conference title, then finished second in the college division tournament and posted a 26-6-1 record. He also finished sixth in the UD nationals.

Basketball

Ken Huelman became a three-time all-conference basketball player and the number one scorer in UNI history, finishing with 1,275 points. He led the push that brought UNI nine straight NCC wins to tie South Dakota State for the title after a near-disastrous 0-3 start.

Baseball

Rick Kriz blasted all runs-batted-in records in baseball. He sent home 33 runs for a two-year career record of 62, replacing Duane Josephson in that department. Kriz hit a solid .378 and earned Little All-America honors. He's now in the New York Yankee organization.

Track

Larry McCready became the Athlete of the Year and then some. He won the Drake Relays 120-yard High Hurdle event in :13.9, finished second in the CD nationals, sixth in the UD nationals with a record :13.7 clocking. He ran that :13.7 twice, once in the historical preliminary heat that saw Villanova's Erv Hall tie the world record of :13.2. McCready finished his magnificent career as a two-time All-America and with a record 808 individual career points.

Wayne Carpenter became the second UNI track All-America, finishing third in the CD national mile run with a 4:08.6 time to put him near the national class. He returns this year.

Mike McCready, Larry's brother, easily was the outstanding yearling of the year. Mike, the likely replacement for Osboe at heavyweight in wrestling, was another track standout. He upped the shot put record more than five feet, with a 56-11 3/4 effort in the NCAA regional meet.

There were other fine accomplishments, but none stood out like these seven

Sports Notes

Mon has done it again.

L. W. 'Mon' Whitford, the retired baseball coach at UNI, continues to be honored for his outstanding coaching career. This summer he was named to the Waterloo SOS Hall of Fame as a charter member.

It's the fifth Hall of Fame he's been selected for. The others are the Helms Baseball Hall, the Baseball Coaches Hall, the North Central Conference Hall and the Iowa Hall.

The final figure is not in but a record number of football season tickets have been sold. The UNI staff with a big helping hand from the Athletic Club went out after the season ticket holder for the first time in a concentrated effort. They expect to exceed 1,000, some 600 more than were sold a year ago.

UNI has five former athletes in the top echelon of professional sports.

In baseball Eddie Watt continues to toil in the bullpen for the red-hot Baltimore Orioles. Duane Josephson is having injury problems again while catching for the Chicago White Sox.

Three Panthers are in the football ranks. Randy Schultz starts his fourth year in pro-ball, this year with the Washington Redskins after being traded by the New Orleans Saints, Phil Minnick his fifth with the Winnipeg Blue Bombers and Phil Schooley his first with the Philadelphia Eagles.
