The Alumnus is issued four times a year in February, May, September and December by the University of Northern Iowa, 1222 West 27th Street, Cedar Falls, Iowa 50613. Second-class postage paid at Cedar Falls, Iowa, 50613.

COVER PICTURE: This photograph of the Commons was taken by G. W. Hanuske, construction assistant at UNI. Mr. Hanuske has exhibited in international competition in Des Moines and Wichita, Kan., and has won numerous local photography awards. In 1965, he served as president of the North Central Camera Club Council, a nine-state organization. The picture of the Campanile on this page also was made by Mr. Hanuske.

Anthony, assistant to the director of Alumni Affairs.

New Bells Purchased for Campanile

THE contract for new bells has been let, and a new singing voice will be installed in the Campanile this spring, it was announced recently by Walter Brown, President of the UNI Foundation.

The campaign for $32,000 was scheduled to close Dec. 31, but 10 days before that date it had gone over the top, and subsequent gifts have added almost $1,500 to the fund.

In view of this, the Foundation board of directors approved three additional new bells to replace three of the original 15 which were not in tuned tolerance. This means that 35 bells have been purchased.

The successful bidder was the I. T. Verdin Company of Cincinnati, Ohio. Their bell foundry is the Petit and Fritsen Company of Holland.

All of the larger bells will carry inscriptions of classes making the apportioned goals per bell, but all classes as well as names of all who participated will be perpetuated on an honor roll scroll to be preserved in the alumni rooms. These will be listed alphabetically by class and area.

UNI Foundation President Brown has commended all those who participated and wishes especially to thank those who served on telephone committees and as class directors. "They have done a tremendous job," he said.

Those who worked for the completion of the project include:

President's Message

To Alumni and Friends of UNI:

Through their participation in the successful Campanile drive, the alumni, faculty, students and friends of UNI have demonstrated their willingness and ability to provide appreciable support for a Foundation project designed to contribute to the permanent development of the University. It would be marvelous if, over the next few years, these groups could enable us to secure badly needed facilities in addition to the classrooms, offices and laboratories which the Legislature may be expected to provide—such as a modern auditorium or a little theater or a museum building.

As soon as the direction of our long-range campus expansion has been agreed upon by the Regents—which should be sometime within the next three or four months—I hope we can determine which specific project of this type merits the highest priority and launch a major effort to build on the Campanile momentum.

UNI Students Continue College Help Program

By Mrs. Joy Schacht

HAPPINESS for a child is made up of little things—popsicles and candy bars, Barbie dolls and roller skates, a small furry kitten and the first snow, a loving smile and a warm hug. But most important to a child is to know that someone cares.

Students at UNI who do care about children have continued a College Help Program which began when one UNI student wanted to gain a little experience in working with children.

Hugh Brown, B.A. '66, now with the Peace Corps in Bombay, India, responsible for community development, conceived the idea of a community service project: a one-to-one ratio of UNI student and pupil at Maywood Elementary School in Waterloo, reported in the September, 1965, issue of The Alumnus magazine.

Brown and his friends organized the program in the fall of 1964, and by the spring of 1965 it involved 53 other UNI student volunteers and 62 children from Maywood School.

A transfer student from Northwestern University, Brown had observed a similar project for children in Chicago neighborhoods.

Miss Bonnie Koloc of Cedar Falls brought a gift of folk music recently to 24 sixth-graders at Longfellow School. A former UNI student who is a folk singer, Miss Koloc worked in the original project. "An unusual number are involved in the school orchestra," said Mrs. Erma Wedeking, homeroom teacher. Carol Cook, cellist, is behind Bonnie. Facing camera (from left) are Debbie Mahlstedt; Jerry Smith, bongo drummer and playwright, and Regina Porter, pianist.

School buses were authorized by the administration for the project, which was designed to enrich the experiences and encourage increased motivation in Maywood's fourth, fifth and sixth graders.

Now the College Help Program, in its third year of existence, is going strong, with nearly 30 UNI students involved with the whole sixth grade class (some 48 pupils) at Longfellow Elementary School in Waterloo.

Volunteers were obtained through an advertisement in the Northern Iowan and requests for announcement in class to all department of education instructors. The response was great, with over 75 students volunteering their services. However, only 40 students could man the program.

Connie Hohlfeld, of Cedar Falls, this year's coordinator of the Longfellow project, describes the program this way:

"It's designed to show children that someone cares about them. We're also trying to increase their academic potential, and we're seeking to set up some type of mature relationship between the child and an older person whom they respect."

Last year Connie, who is a junior majoring in history with secondary teaching as her goal, worked in the program involving some 80 pupils at both Hawthorne and Maywood schools.

"Programs to help the children with language skills were then developed at both schools this year, bringing in special teachers for this specific purpose," Connie explained. "So evidently the school officials felt that they are now providing a more continuing, fuller program than we were able to provide."

Charles Matterson, B.A. '67, now training with the Peace Corps, bound for Turkey, headed the program last year.

Why do University students give up half an afternoon weekly, rain or shine, well or ill, for a voluntary service project?

"Some do it for the experience," Connie said. "In fact, that is the biggest factor, especially if the student really wants to teach in an 'inner city' school. Most are elementary teaching majors who are interested in critical educational questions."

But the half afternoon a week has expanded for most of the volunteers to more special plans. Some have taken their children to plays on Saturdays. Others brought their children to the Christmas tree lighting on campus. Still another arranged an Iowa farm tour, where the farmer explained farm management and the children admired baby pigs and later picnicked.

"This is really all up to the individual," Connie said, "how much he does outside his one hour a week. We bring the entire group to see the Young People's Theatre presentation every year, and also to Children's Day on campus. Once we toured the entire campus, including the greenhouse where the alligator lives."

During that one hour a week at Longfellow, the UNI students and pupils play games, paint, read, and work in arts and crafts. One girl brought pumpkins for jack-o'-lanterns at Halloween, another girl teaches embroidery.

Individual Type of Program

"It's a completely individual type of program," Connie went on. "Some students have taken their children on library trips in order to interest them in the world of books. Then, too, we help them with their homework."

Connie stressed that it's very important to the child to have the same person relating to him.

One girl, realizing how eager the children are to see their college helpers each week, wrote a note to them from her hospital bed explaining her enforced absence.

The results? They're intangible and not too measurable as yet with the program in its infancy.

"But each of us hopes that in some measure we have helped the child to help himself, that we have sparked the improvement or growth a little bit," Connie mused. "Sometimes it takes a long time to see results."

"We're trying to motivate through education to help the child become self-sufficient," she added.

Longfellow School is termed an "inner city" school by Darwin Hopkins, principal. The school's enrollment shows 37 per cent white pupils and 63 per cent Negro.

Principal's Observations

Mr. Hopkins, a graduate of Upper Iowa College who obtained his master's degree at UNI, says the College Help Program is "very successful in that our children have made the effort to stay after school."

"The thing I have noticed is that the same children come back each time. And of course," he continued, "I observe pretty closely—not as a check or a watchdog sort of thing—but just because I'm interested. These girls and fellows are really good. They do something with the kids—not for them. They involve them in various things."

Mr. Hopkins emphasized that involvement by the University students is the key with the children.

"They use art materials and paint—or rather, they let the children paint. They help them choose books in the library. They help them with 'knotty' modern math problems. We just don't have as much time as we would like to do these things with the children," he said.

Mr. Hopkins praised the UNI volunteers, saying they're "young and have fire and a lot of ideas."

"This is what our kids like. If they weren't good, our kids wouldn't stay, especially since the program takes place after school hours, and since there's much construction going on outside (the Virden Creek urban renewal project), and you know how kids love to play around new construction," he added.

Hopkins said that in the school administration's opinion the project has worked out "very well."

"Of course, there were initial problems of getting it organized," he said. "But these were minimized due to the pre-planning and hard work that your UNI student Connie Hohlfeld put into the program. She seems to have the situation well in hand—and she comes to me when she wants to do something special or wants to clear something new."

The school gave the volunteers supplies, but for the most part the UNI students "make do" with what they find at hand.

"They play games with the kids, too—such as Monopoly, and this new game, Twister, as well as other 'disguised' educational games," Mr. Hopkins said. "A group of boys wrote, produced and presented a one-act play, 'Santa Claus and His Reindeer,' to the rest of the children just before Christmas. It was well done and very well received."

The results? "We feel that it has helped and is helping to give the children a sense of values and to consequently become better citizens," Mr. Hopkins said. "It's helping educationally, too, but we have no figures to date. However, teachers and parents have mentioned the improvement in attitudes toward assignments and homework."

Other Programs at Longfellow

Special programs are not a new experience for Longfellow School. The school supervises—and provides facilities for three classes of special education (educable); the only physical therapy center in Northeast Iowa, with children attending from such communities as Waverly and Reinbeck, a cooperative effort between the Waterloo Community Schools and the United Cerebral Palsy Association; the only neurologically impaired class in Waterloo; a severely emotionally disturbed class, and a pre-school hearing handicapped class operated by the county, a cooperative venture for three- and four-year-olds with children attending from as far away as Waverly and Oelwein. The school also provides a pre-school Story Hour every Wednesday morning for four-year-olds who will attend kindergarten next September.

"Student nurses or student teachers visit quite often," Mr. Hopkins said. "They're particularly interested in our special classes."

The school also boasts a new library, a product of Waterloo's elementary school library expansion program, Mr. Hopkins said.

The College Help Program hopes to continue to grow and include another Waterloo school next year, Connie said. Its over-all objective might best be illustrated by the title of the song Bonnie Rimrodt is teaching the children in each Tuesday's opening session: "Up, Up With People."

NORTHERN IOWAN Executive Editor (for the spring semester) Mike Hanna of Osage and News Editor (for fall semester) Diane Field of Goldfield edit a story.

By Jan Schilling

(Editor's Note: UNI has three official student publications: The NORTHERN IOWAN, a student newspaper which was originally called the NORMAL EYE and later the COLLEGE EYE; the OLD GOLD, student yearbook; and SEVEN, campus magazine of art and opinion.)

STUDENT publications throughout the country are becoming increasingly controversial. Publications at the University of Northern Iowa are no exception.

The once traditional editorials on dorm food, "school spirit," and rivalries between Greeks and independents are giving way to serious articles and letters to the editor on such subjects as the draft and the Vietnam war, civil rights, and student participation in institutional policy making.

For example, an article advocating draft resistance was written by a UNI faculty member and printed in the school newspaper, resulting in widespread criticism of the printing of such an article in the paper of a state-supported school.

Student Publications at UNI

Numerous debates on freedom of expression and freedom of speech followed.

Many people began to ask just how student publications were handled at UNI, who was responsible for the paper, and what were its policies. This article will attempt to answer some of these questions.

The Board of Control of Student Publications is the policy-making body for student publications on the campus of UNI. This Board is composed of five students and four faculty members and has the duty of appointing the editors of the three student publications on campus, the Northern Iowan, Old Gold, and Seven. Also included in its functions are the approval of budgets, letting of contracts for printing, engraving, and photography of the student publications, and general policy making. The Board is responsible to the president of the University.

The Northern Iowan, the campus newspaper, is published every Tuesday and Friday except during school vacation or examination periods. Called the College Eye until 1967, the newspaper's purpose is to provide the university campus with news while giving its staff members practical experience in the art of journalism. Any student may apply for work on the paper and can obtain experience in writing, editing, photography, layout, advertising, or business management. The top three positions of executive editor, managing editor, and business manager are appointed by the Board of Control of Student Publications while the other paid positions are recommended for Board approval by the executive editor.

Who Decides What To Print?

The executive editor of the newspaper must submit to the adviser all editorials and any other copy, letters to the editor, advertising, cartoons, or photographs about which he is in doubt concerning the advisability to print. The adviser may counsel the editor about any material he considers illogical, intemperate, ill-advised, or in poor taste, or for copy based on inadequate or incorrect information. The editor is free to accept or reject this counsel.

The editor and the adviser are free to consult the university attorney on legal questions. The adviser may delay publication and refer to the Board at a special meeting called within two full class days any editorial or other material he judges to be libelous, obscene, or extremely vulgar, or other matter which would subject the editor and others responsible for the newspaper to civil or criminal liability if they are unable to reach a decision.

If the Board at the meeting judges that the material is extremely vulgar or would subject those responsible for the newspaper to civil or criminal liability, it will prevent publication.

In summary, the only copy which must receive approval prior to publication are editorials or other material which the adviser has seen and judged would subject those responsible for the newspaper to civil or criminal liability.

Bernard DeHoff, assistant professor of English at UNI, has served as faculty adviser of the Northern Iowan since 1955.

DeHoff believes the Northern Iowan should fulfill the basic purpose of reporting campus news and expressing opinions and the four functions of explaining, informing, guiding, and entertaining. Although the paper serves as a forum for campus opinion, it is not obligated to print everything that is submitted for publication.

Approximately one-third of the cost of publishing the newspaper is covered by advertising. The rest of the cost is paid for by a subsidy from student fees.

DeHoff believes that the newspaper staff must consider the Northern Iowan the second most important thing in their lives, second only to their studies. He believes the staff works for a number of reasons, including the money that the top positions carry with them. Another reason is that of prestige and power. The members of the staff probably know the operation of the institution as well as any students on campus. Some of the staff members desire to go into journalism as a career, perhaps teaching journalism or acting as an adviser to a student publication. Since UNI offers no journalism major or minor, work on the paper provides a means of learning about journalism as well as gaining practical experience.

The Northern Iowan was changed from a weekly to a semiweekly publication in the spring of 1965. Miss Ila Wales of Bussey, executive editor, sees this as a big move involving more deadlines, more pressure, and more work. Before the change, the paper was averaging 10 or 12 pages a week.

THE ALL-AMERICA CRUNCH—Ray Pedersen, dark jersey, shows Little All-America form with a crunching tackle on Northern Michigan quarterback Lloyd Carr. Pedersen played brilliantly throughout the season, earned his third straight all-conference medal, was named the league's most valuable lineman and then was named to the Associated Press' first Little All-America defensive team.

RAY PEDERSEN, tabbed by head coach Stan Sheriff as the finest lineman at Northern Iowa in his eight years, now has the honors to back up the statement.

The 6-4, 218-pound two-way star was named to the Associated Press' first Little All-America team as a defensive guard.

Earlier he was voted to all-conference status for the third consecutive year and was named the most valuable lineman.

The hometown boy does make good.

Pedersen earned all-state honors four years ago at NU High, then SC High, and not only became an instant starter for the Panthers as a sophomore, but a two-way performer in the era of specialization.

An honor student in the classroom, Pedersen played both offensive guard and offensive tackle, depending on the needs of the team during his career, and was always a main cog in the Panther defensive line.

The co-captain's greatest game may have come this year against Drake in a losing effort.

Hometown Boy Makes Good

"It was the greatest defensive effort any player of ours has given," said line coach Don Erusha. "Ray was magnificent. Against Drake's power sweeps he took on the entire blocking force time after time and still came up with most of the tackles. On more than one occasion he not only got the blockers and the runner but had to drive a couple of teammates out of the way to do it."

Pedersen, rated as a top professional prospect for more than a year and called by one pro scout as one of the best three interior linemen in the Midwest, is not interested in the play for pay sport at this time. He's aiming for a coaching career and work in a youth religious group called the Navigators.

Modesty is Ray Pedersen. After that Drake game in which his own coaches praised his effort as the best they had seen, he was down. He felt he had let his teammates down by not playing better in the 10-7 defeat.

Two other defensive stars made the 1967 all-conference team. They were senior linebacker Larry Clement, Newton; and senior free safety Bill Smith, Manchester.

Smith also attained Little All-America honorable mention status following a brilliant two-year career that saw him intercept 15 enemy passes in 19 games, eight in his senior season. Both efforts are records. He was also UNI's leading punt and kickoff return man and outstanding in support against the running play.

Winter Sports

Fast starts marked the opening of the winter sports program at UNI.

Zeke Hogeland, new cage coach, got his Panthers off on a 7-3 start in its scramble for the NCC title. The Panthers were the pre-season pick of the press as the team most likely to succeed.

In wrestling, Chuck Patten's aggressive squad opened with impressive wins over Cornell, Illinois and St. Cloud State while losing only to Colorado State during the holidays.

Glen Henry got one objective early. His swimmers opened with a double dual and won their first match, over Iowa Wesleyan, after going 0-7 in the maiden season last year.

Captain Jerry Waugh was the early leader for the basketball team, averaging 22.2 over the first 10 games and coming up with a 35-point night against North Dakota U.

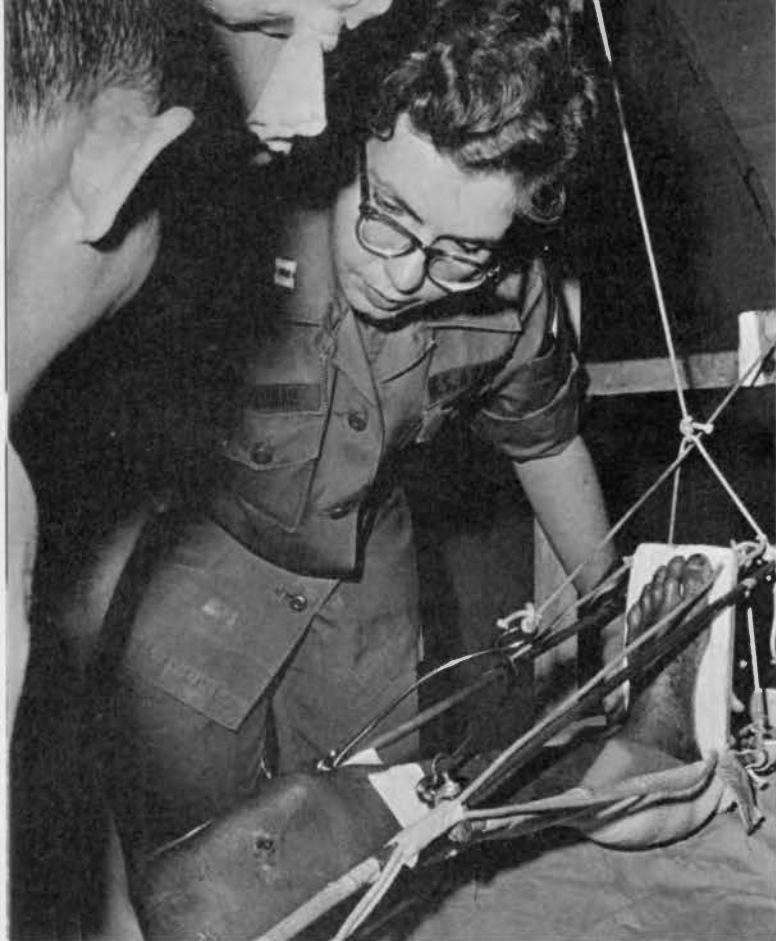

Patten, on the other hand, had a host of unbeaten matmen in the first four meets. Heavyweight Kent Osboe and 167-pound Jim Guyer were both 4-0. Co-captain Jerry Bond, 145, and Marv Reiland, 137, were both 3-0-1. Paul Stinson, 123, was 2-0 and Skip Bellock, 177, was 3-0.

UNI wrestlers started the tournament trail on March 1-2 at Sioux City where they were to defend their North Central Conference title. They then moved to Mankato State on March 8-9 for the NCAA College Division nationals where they finished third a year ago.

Last year both Jerry Bond and Kent Osboe finished second in the nationals.

NATIONAL CONTENDERS—Northern Iowa's wrestling team heads into conference and national tournaments in early March and they have two goals in mind. First they want to successfully defend their North Central Conference championship. Second, they are out to improve on their third place finish of last year in the NCAA College Division nationals. The squad, left to right, front row: Dave Steinkamp, Tom Horton, Jim Guyer, Jerry Bond and Wayne Shutt. Second row: Kent Osboe, Skip Bellock, Brad Stolz, Paul Stinson, Marv Reiland, and Duane Nosbisch. Third row: Dan Mashek, Bill Straw, Stan Slessor (off squad), Buzz Brown, Sam Runyan and John Maehl. Back row: manager Ty Kimball, Dennis Healy, Larry Messerly, Dennis Severson, Jim Kinyon, Greg Smith, and head coach Chuck Patten.

(Editor's Note: Specialist Thomas, the author, was wounded on another assignment in Vietnam. He has since been evacuated to the Valley Forge Military Hospital in Pennsylvania for treatment of his wounds.)

A 1964 graduate of the University of Northern Iowa is one of nine U.S. Army medical specialists who have established physical therapy clinics in evacuation and field hospitals throughout the Republic of Vietnam.

Captain Jolene K. Tomlan, 25, of Newton, Iowa, began her training as a physical therapist in August, 1964, as a second lieutenant at Ft. Sam Houston, Texas, and graduated from its Army Medical Field Service School in September, 1965. She arrived in Vietnam during March, 1967, and is physical therapist of the 24th Evacuation Hospital located at Long Binh, 17 miles northeast of Saigon.

"I became interested in the Army's physical therapy program after hearing a former Army physical therapist speak at a career guidance meeting during my college freshman year. In the summer of my junior year, I attended the Army Summer Practical Program which allowed me to spend three weeks living on an Army post. I became a member of the Army Medical Specialist Corps in July, 1964, shortly after I received my bachelor of arts degree."

A 1960 graduate of Newton Community High School, where she played trumpet in the school band and was a member of the National Honor Society and Girls' Recreation Association, Captain Tomlan entered the University of Northern Iowa in the fall after her high school graduation.

During her four years at the University, she was a member of the Women's Recreation Association, the Physical Education Club, vice-president of the Baptist Campus Center, a member of the Theta Epsilon Sorority, Purple Arrow Honor Society, Tri-Beta Biological Honor Society and was awarded the Purple and Old Gold Award for Meritorious Scholarship.

"My major of physical education and my profession of physical therapy are similar. They both involve working with people and the teaching of skills. Instead of sport skills, a physical therapist teaches the activities of daily living. I am especially indebted to my professors in the department of physical education for women who taught me to think, to analyze and to see beyond myself."

Faced With a Problem

Captain Tomlan arrived at the 24th Evacuation Hospital in March, 1967. She was immediately faced with the problem of creating a physical therapy program under the disadvantages of a still growing hospital complex which lacked basic physical therapy equipment.

"Once I organized my daily visits to the intensive care post-operative wards, I managed to obtain three machines that could be used on my patients to reduce pain in their healing injuries. One is a diathermy machine: an expensive piece of equipment capable of providing deep heat to areas of the body without touching the patient. The two other machines are a muscle stimulator and a paraffin bath used in the treatment of arthritic ailments.

"One of my other needs was a machine on which soldiers could perform therapy exercises. Really, several machines consisting of weighted pulleys and tension springs would be needed. Instead of waiting for supply to obtain the equipment, I designed and helped build a machine on which several patients could exercise at the same time. It's crude but functional."

With the GIs

Captain Tomlan's day is spent in the hospital's post-operative and intensive care wards.

"Many of the patients in the intensive care wards are recovering from severe head injuries. Muscle weakness usually accompanies this type of wound. It's my job to provide therapy to maintain range of motion and thereby prevent secondary disability so the patients can recover in the fastest time possible."

Some patients are unable to speak because of brain injury. Captain Tomlan must give them shoulder, arm, hand and leg exercises while keeping up a one-sided conversation.

"How's that arm doing today, Joe? Let's bend it a little bit . . . that's it . . . concentrate on keeping that shoulder loose . . ."

More than two-thirds of all American soldiers treated at the hospital are returned to duty within 30 days. Those that are MEDEVACed to Army hospitals out of the country for further treatment have already begun their therapy thanks to Captain Tomlan.

The Desire to Heal

Miss Tomlan's off-duty hours are divided between a correspondence course in mechanical drawing, the chapel choir, Bible-study classes and reading.

Christian fellowship manifests itself during a Bible-study discussion in the hospital's chapel. Spec. 5 John E. Henderson (left), Panama City, Fla., and Spec. 5 Donald R. McBeth, Marion, Ohio, attend the nightly Bible studies with Captain Tomlan.

A neck therapy device gets the right adjustment as Captain Tomlan demonstrates with Spec. 4 Jon Klein, Malverne, N.Y. The weighted-pulley device is one of several functions performed by this machine designed and built by Nurse Tomlan.

"There are usually only three or four people at our Bible discussions but where even two or three are gathered . . ."

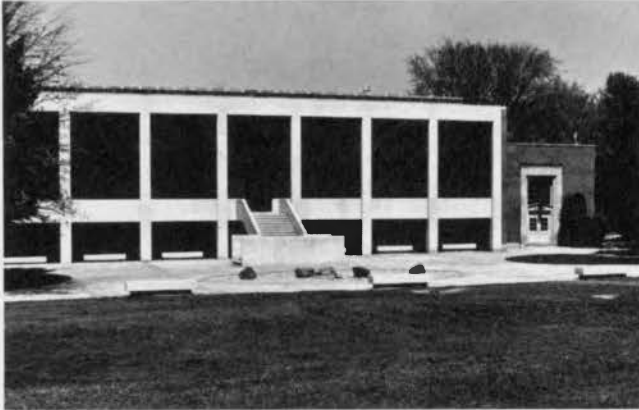

This is the spirit which characterizes Jolene Tomlan. The desire to heal through daily, progressive care.

In her words, ". . . the ability to see beyond myself."

Mid-Year Commencement

Drake University President Paul F. Sharp told 243 graduates at the fifth UNI Mid-Year Commencement Jan. 24 that no education promises to remove uncertainty from today's concerns or from tomorrow's promises.

"Nor should it," Dr. Sharp said. "For educated men, uncertainty suggests excitement and carries with it the zest of challenge. And by 'educated men' I mean those who have learned to think their own thoughts, to experience beauty for themselves and have learned to choose their own actions."

He said that when we learn to think our own thoughts and to experience beauty for ourselves, we cannot be made slaves to other men's ideas, or be victims of the computer's superior efficiencies or be programmed for action by other men.

Dr. Sharp told the graduates that magnanimity, selflessness and concern for others are far more significant as marks of their education than are their Graduate Record Examination scores, their graduate school scholarships or their grade point averages.

UNI President J. W. Maucker presided and awarded degrees to the candidates. Dr. William C. Lang, vice-president and dean of instruction at UNI, presented the candidates, and Milo Lawton, director of alumni affairs, conducted the alumni induction.

The bachelor of arts degree, under the teaching program, was awarded to 167 graduates; 54 graduates received the bachelor of arts degree in liberal and vocational arts; and 21 graduates received the master of arts and master of arts in education degrees. One graduate received the specialist in education degree.

Student Publications

Now, however, each of the two issues runs 8 or 10 pages.

Another important move was the change to offset printing in the fall of 1966. This process has the advantage of being less costly and producing clearer pictures. However, the number of pages of each issue must be in multiples of four by this process, thus involving a need for more copy at times. A print shop on College Hill prints the Northern Iowan.

A number of changes occur necessarily as a new editor is appointed each year. Some editors take care primarily of the editorial pages and let the other editors take care of the rest of the paper. Miss Wales, editor for the fall semester, says she is far more concerned with the paper as a whole than with just the editorials. She believes that there is now more discussion among the staff than was previously the case. The current executive editor believes that the reporting of news is the most important purpose of the newspaper and that the editorial section should not be out of balance with the rest of the paper. Thus there are now fewer editorials being printed in comparison with news stories and letters to the editor.

Recent Controversy

A number of controversial issues have arisen lately concerning the Northern Iowan. Probably the issue receiving the most publicity concerned the article advocating draft resistance printed in the paper and written by Edward Hoffmans, instructor of English at UNI. According to DeHoff, the issue of Hoffmans' article reflects the new emphasis on the necessity of the newspaper of UNI, a state school, to make sure that all sides of an issue dealing with an off-campus subject referring to a larger community are heard. This matter resulted in the incorporation of a statement forbidding the printing of any copy which may result in civil or criminal liability in the policy statement of the Board of Control of Student Publications for campus publications.

Another controversial issue involved the resignation of Dr. Josef Fox, professor of English at UNI, as a columnist for the Northern Iowan. Dr. Fox's resignation followed a statement by Miss Wales that lengthy letters from faculty members would not necessarily be printed in the newspaper. Dr. Fox felt that his colleagues were being discriminated against as members of the University community and thus resigned. Nearly every letter that is submitted for publication now appears in print, according to Miss Wales.

The Old Gold

The Old Gold, UNI's yearbook, presents a pictorial outline of life, activities, and achievements of the campus community at UNI through one academic year. The editor and business manager are selected from letters of application by the Board of Control of Student Publications and they in turn select the remaining editors and staff members. Any interested student is eligible to work on the yearbook staff whether he has had previous experience or not.

Donald Kelly, assistant director of University Relations at UNI, is faculty adviser for the Old Gold. He acts in an advisory capacity on questions of layout and organization and also is referred to on questions of policy, similar to the role of the Northern Iowan adviser. Miss Karen Vaudt of Manson is editor of the current book.

The Old Gold is financed by sales of the yearbook (four dollars a copy), by subsidy from student fees, and by income from organization and senior pictures and advertising.

This year the yearbook will not be available for delivery until September instead of May as was previously the case. The reason for this is that the Old Gold will include events for the complete academic year, fall through spring. In other years, the yearbook included events of fall and winter, but the spring events were from the previous year.

The treatment of the content of each year's book is up to the individual editor. A number of changes in last year's book aroused much comment on campus. The 1967 Old Gold included little written copy but a great many pictures of campus events. Group pictures of faculty members and athletic teams and organizations were excluded, although pictures of the administration did appear. Instead of group pictures, action shots of the different members of the campus community were included. However, the individuals in these pictures were not identified in print, a fact which received much criticism by a large segment of students.

A survey of campus opinion regarding the 1967 Old Gold yearbook publication was conducted by the University Research Bureau at the request of the Board of Student Publications. The aim was to get a more precise measurement of the reaction to the changes in format of the yearbook. The survey revealed that approximately 60 per cent of the respondents did not like extremely limited use of captions and picture identifications, and that approximately 80 per cent of the respondents would purchase a 1968 Old Gold if it was a combination of the traditional yearbook and the new photo-essay type of treatment as evidenced in the 1967 book.

Miss Vaudt says this year's book will be a combination of the traditional group pictures and identification with the photo-essay treatment.

Kelly commented that there was at times a problem in finding students willing to work on the Old Gold. He attributed this partially to student apathy, poor communication in attracting applicants, and the lack of a substantial number of journalism courses. Comparatively few students work more than one year on the Old Gold, partially because the job is very time consuming. Approximately 30 to 40 students work on the yearbook at some time during the year.

Seven

Seven is the campus magazine of art and opinion. Its primary purpose is to provide an outlet for student and faculty creative works. It began publication in the 1963-64 school year and is published twice a year.

The editor, managing editor, and business manager are appointed by the Board of Control of Student Publications. Other editors are chosen by the editor and faculty adviser. Miss Julie Patterson of Dubuque is this year's editor. Richard Rackstraw, instructor of English at UNI, is faculty adviser and serves in the same capacity as the adviser for the Old Gold.

Miss Patterson and Rackstraw stress that Seven is a creative magazine that is a work of art in itself, combining the visual arts with literary works. It is connected with music and drama also, receiving its name from the seven arts.

The visual work in the magazine, including photography and art, appears not simply by itself or as an illustration, but contributes to the completeness or underlying idea of the whole magazine, according to the editor.

The adviser and editor work toward including a broad selection of literary and visual works. However, the quality of the work submitted and the underlying idea contribute to the selection of the final articles to be printed.

A new publication has appeared recently on the UNI campus called The University Free Press. The publication is in no way directly connected with the University and is not regulated by the

Board of Control of Student Publications. It does not receive funds from student fees.

To quote the editors, "The University Free Press is not a newspaper but rather a journal of opinion designed to express opinions held by members of the campus community. The financial support for the Free Press comes almost totally from sales of advertisements, and it is published whenever adequate copy and money requirements are met. The opinions expressed in this paper are solely those of the contributors. The paper is simply an open forum for the expression of thoughts and opinions which may be popular or unpopular to the majority of the community."

The paper was founded in the spring of 1967. The third issue of the paper was published in November of 1967.

It is not the purpose of this article to condemn the involvement of student publications with controversial issues. In fact, publications are reaching more readers and raising more interest because of such articles.

Rather, we have attempted to explain some of the changes that have resulted from this increased interest in social, political, and academic affairs.
