CONTRIBUTORS

LINDA BINGHAM, who grew up in Shell Rock, Iowa, earned her bachelor's degree in English from UNI in 1991. As a UNI graduate teaching assistant she taught "College Reading and Writing" during the 1993-94 academic year, and during the 1994-95 year she has taught courses in composition at Hawkeye Community College as well. She is currently completing her master's thesis at UNI, an extended treatment of the Troilus and Criseyde material examined in her Draftings essay here. Linda plans to pursue a doctoral degree in English and hopes to continue teaching in Iowa.

LEE RICE comes from Council Bluffs, Iowa, and has continued writing since leaving UNI in 1992. He has worked in legal research in Tuscon, Arizona, and in an Omaha, Nebraska book store. He hopes to own and manage his own book store in the coming years.

STEPHANIE ALTHOF is talented in the fields of both English and music. A graduate of Northern University High School in Cedar Falls, she holds two bachelor's degrees from UNI: the bachelor of arts in English and the bachelor of music degree in voice performance. An active member of UNI's English Club and Sigma Tau Gamma, the English student honorary, she is currently pursuing a master's degree in arts administration at St. Mary's College in Winona, Minnesota.

FREDERICK E. WALTHOUR maintains a love of history as well as of literature. He earned his bachelor's degree in history from UNI in 1985 and his master's degree in English in 1992. Since then he has been teaching middle school students in the Weslaco School District on the Texas-Mexico border. He taught English and reading to his middle schoolers in 1993-94. This year he is teaching Texas history. During the 1993-94 year, Fred also taught freshman composition and literature at the University of Texas-Pan American. Recognizing that the humanities represent the perfect wedding of his love of literature and history, he is currently weighing an offer to pursue doctoral studies at Idaho State University.
CORY NAUGHTON, who was raised in Carroll, Iowa, earned his bachelor's degree in English from UNI in 1991. He married a fellow UNI student and immediately began teaching language arts at Sacred Heart Junior High School in Fort Dodge. This year he has added a drama course to the junior high curriculum, and he hopes to expand it toward full-scale drama productions.

DANIEL JENERS grew up in Marion, Iowa, and attended Regis High School in Cedar Rapids. He has worked in the publishing and printing fields since he left UNI in 1993, and he is currently living in Chapel Hill, North Carolina, where he will enter the master's degree program in Germanic studies at the University of North Carolina in 1996. North Carolina's degree is an interdisciplinary program in medieval studies which will allow Dan to study Germanic languages as well as literature. He hopes to teach in a university and write fantasy literature based on medieval mythology and life.