UNI, Luther create Postville archive

DECORAH — An archival project on the 2008 immigration raid at Agriprocessors in Postville has been developed at Luther College in Decorah and the University of Northern Iowa in Cedar Falls.

“The Postville Project” has been supported and sustained by Luther College and UNI since its inception in 2009. The project has received a total of $35,000 from the State Historical Society of Iowa between 2010 and 2012 in the form of Historical Resource Development Project grants.

Presently, the project holds 17 collections, 12 of which are currently displayed on the project website. Archiving of physical materials is focused at the Luther College Archives, and maintenance of digital resources is held primarily at UNI.

The collections contain mixed media materials from sources such as the state of Iowa Attorney General’s office, the Iowa Department of Labor, The Courier, Sister Mary McCauley, the Decorah Area Faith Coalition, the Postville Response Coalition, Argueta and several local community members.

The project team continues seeking out new materials for inclusion in the archive. Members of the UNI project team are finalizing an “Index of Related Resources” that will be made available to users via the project website and display a thorough list of resources that document Postville before, during and after the raid.

For more information on the project, to donate materials or to view the current collections, visit www.postvilleproject.org.

mate business goals,” the company said.

The dueling documents with the U.S. District Court of the Southern District of New York detail for the first time aspects of the government’s case against Apple. The court is scheduled on June 3 to hear the price-fixing trial that has reverberated beyond the fast-growing digital books market.

As consumers migrate from paper books to e-readers, publishing firms have struggled to maintain profits with discounted version of their works online. Meanwhile, Google, Apple and Barnes & Noble have fought to break into a lucrative market for e-
