THE PROGENY OF LA FRANCE, THE FIRST HYBRID TEA ⁽¹⁾

CLARK D. PARIS AND T. J. MANEY

Just what prompted Guillot fils of Lyon-Montplaisir, France, to name a pink rose, introduced in 1867, La France may never be known. Subsequent history has shown that this rose was the first Hybrid Tea. It was grown from a seed of Mme. Bravy, a creamy white tea, fertilized by Victor Verdier a bright rose-colored Hybrid Perpetual. Since the French rosarians have originated the first variety that became the progenitor of most of the major classes of modern roses, no better name could have been found for the first Hybrid Tea. Around the turn of the twentieth century, this class of roses became the most popular of the modern roses, and its popularity has not diminished in the ensuing years.

Unlike most rose varieties, La France is still in commerce today. Very few varieties last more than twenty-five years before being superseded by a better rose. The particular shade of pink found in La France is known as La France pink. This alone attests to the wide use of the rose.

Since breeders select parents with desirable characteristics, and because La France was so widely grown, it was natural for it to be frequently used as a parent for breeding. In the present study, 324 named seedlings and 68 sports have been found whose origin can be traced to La France. This list includes such well known roses as Liberty, Richmond, Mrs. W. J. Grant (Belle Siebrecht), Joseph Guy (Lafayette), Radiance, and Etoile de Hollande. The complete list of seedling varieties is given in Table I. The parent, or parents, which are descendants of La France are designated by an asterisk (*). A list of sports is given in Table II.
