A MODERN CATACLYSM

HARRY M. KELLY

(ABSTRACT)

Wholesale but selective destruction of clams, by a cyclonic storm, occurred last summer along the western and northwestern shores of Spirit Lake, Iowa, where shallow water, soft bottom, gentle slope and abundance of clams were correlated with an unusually heavy and long continued on-shore wind.

INTERRUPTED HIBERNATION IN THE GARTER SNAKE

HARRY M. KELLY

(ABSTRACT)

A brief statement of two cases in which the common garter snake became active during the period of a "January thaw."
