Message from the Dean

Academic accreditation is vital to the UNIBusiness brand. AACSB International, the oldest and most prestigious business school accreditation association, granted our initial accreditation in 1993. We share the high distinction with less than five percent of business schools worldwide.

To maintain accreditation, business schools are subject to rigorous periodic “Continuous Improvement Reviews.” Our latest review was conducted this past academic year. Typically, two possible outcomes can emerge from the review process. If the review team (deans from other accredited business schools) observes severe issues, it recommends an extended review year during which the school must address the issues cited under the watchful eye of the review team. On the other hand, if the issues encountered are not severe enough, the school is expected to resolve them on its own before the next five-year review. At the end of the review process, every school receives one of the two recommendations.

After our initial accreditation in 1993, the first review followed in 1999-2000. The team found issues of sufficient severity that a probationary review was required. Under AACSB supervision, we had to resolve those issues and document progress. When the 2009 review team arrived, it found only minor concerns but, more importantly, praised our faculty for its obvious commitment to continuous improvement. At the conclusion of the most recent five-year review cycle, our 2014-15 reviewers practically created a third recommendation: no concerns at all. Not even minor issues to resolve before the next review. In the experience of our former dean Farzad Moussavi, an AACSB reviewer, there are always issues that emerge during the review process. The only question is how severe they are.

“No concerns” is unheard of in AACSB reviews, just as would be expected in any audit situation. The auditor’s job is to find problems. The evolution of our AACSB performance is an accomplishment to cherish. It mirrors what we believe to be commendable progress as a business school.

“No concerns” is unheard of in AACSB reviews, just as would be expected in any audit situation.

However, the team’s finding of no concerns, severe or otherwise, has caused us to pause for reflection as we look toward the future. We now have no explicit AACSB guidance, no “marching orders,” no clear direction mandated for improvement. Our success means even marginal improvements will be difficult to achieve. We must really push ourselves. Thankfully, in my new role as dean, I can look back on the changes in the college since that initial accreditation in 1993, or even further back when we grew from a department to a School of Business in the 80’s, and see that pushing ourselves is well-ingrained in our culture.

I look forward to that future. I feel enthusiasm building in conversations with faculty members as they update our curriculum to respond, for example, to the growing importance of big data in decision making. I feel that enthusiasm in our students’ engagement in solving real business problems through live-client classroom projects; last year alone they contributed over 31,000 hours to more than 100 organizations in Iowa and beyond. I am very proud to be a part of this UNIBusiness community.

Supporting the Business of Art

Thanks to a collaboration between UNIBusiness and UNI’s Department of Art, UNI art students were given the opportunity to participate in a real commissioning project for the newly named and updated United Fire Group Insurance (UFG) Seminar Room in the Curris Business Building.

Daniel Perry and Tom Stancliffe, both UNI art faculty and accomplished sculptors, were excited to work with Dean Leslie Wilson and engage the resources of the department’s Public Art Incubator. “In an entrepreneurial sense, we encourage students to think, I want to be an artist so I can start a business,” said Stancliffe. “In reality, this rarely happens.” This project was important for students to experience the commissioning process and potentially discover the business opportunities available as artists.

“We want students to find a place where their art can be part of the world,” added Perry, “but if artists don’t understand the business side, they will end up working a more traditional nine-to-five job to make ends meet.”

Twelve art students participated in the first UNIBusiness public art commission competition. Of the twelve, five were selected to present proposals. Whitney Kibbie’s architectural wall art depicting the Cedar Rapids skyline, home to UFG, was chosen. “The committee was so impressed with the proposals that the College commissioned two additional pieces,” explained Wilson. Sculptures by Dawn Tuve and Jacob McGinn have now been added to the growing art collection throughout the Curris Business Building. Most importantly, all three students enhanced their portfolios with an art commission and gained valuable experience in the commissioning process.

“The committee was so impressed with the proposals that the College commissioned two additional pieces.”

The UNIBusiness public art commission competition is not the only opportunity for UNI art students to experience the business side of art. “The John Papajohn Entrepreneurial Center (JPEC) is a resource designed to help students start a business built on their artistic skill and passion,” said Wilson.

Demand is healthy for innovators who can produce public art for businesses, bus and train stations, airports, parks, courthouses, parking garages, campuses, and revitalization projects. Thanks to JPEC resources, the art department’s Public Art Incubator, and opportunities to participate in a public art commission, UNI art students can learn how to become successful business owners who meet the growing demand for public art.
United Fire Group (UFG) has a commitment to education and a connection to UNI with more than 30 alums working for the company. This prompted a gift from UFG to UNI Business to provide funding over a five-year period to support ongoing student development activities such as undergraduate research, competitions, conferences, and international experiences, many of which use the new UFG Seminar Room. The UFG Seminar Room is intended to be a symbol of professionalism in business for our students, characterized by the high impact of activities held there.

In 2016, the John Pappajohn Entrepreneurial Center will celebrate its 20th anniversary.

John Pappajohn’s gift to establish the center was intended to inspire, encourage and develop a spirit of entrepreneurship across the UNI campus as well as the state.

JPEC is a hub of student entrepreneurial activity. Programs are designed to help students explore entrepreneurship and develop ideas into well-crafted businesses. These programs are as diverse and varied as the ideas that students bring to the center. Programs range from academic courses to applied business-forming activities. One example is the Student Business Incubator, where participants have access to the JPEC team, guiding them in all areas of entrepreneurship: intellectual property, marketing, management, law, operations, communications, accounting, technology, customer service, and human resources. In 2014 alone, 79 students utilized the incubator resources, 25 percent of which were tenants in the physical incubation space.

Pappajohn’s focus in his generous gift was to increase the number of entrepreneurs in Iowa. His experience and wisdom said students were the place to start. UNI Business is grateful for Pappajohn’s commitment to UNI, which enables us to foster a thriving entrepreneurial environment.
An interview with

John Pappajohn

Pappajohn’s story is a fifty year saga of a young Greek immigrant who made Iowa his home. As he embarked upon a career in venture capitalism, John Pappajohn simultaneously staked a claim in the world of art. Named by Art Magazine as one of the top 200 art collectors in the world for 15 consecutive years, he shared with UNIBusiness how this came to be.

Art colors the pages of Pappajohn’s success story, etching it with passion, philanthropy and, unsurprisingly, financial gains. By Kristi Paxton

THE ADVANTAGE OF ADVERSITY

A Greek immigrant living in Mason City, Iowa, John Pappajohn attended kindergarten—twice—due to the language barrier. “There is something about the trials of starting with nothing,” he explained. “I think being an immigrant is an advantage. Adversity shows you what you have to do to get somewhere. I call that an advantage.”

“Pappajohn embraced all work, thus adding varied experiences to his repertoire. “For example, my brother and I plucked 50 thousand chickens. I learned about business working in my dad’s grocery store where I worked for ten cents a day. That’s how we made a living back when we were kids.”

“I have a philosophy. I like to tell kids today that in business, you build on your data base; you learn and grow from each experience.” said Pappajohn.

A NEW INTEREST

“The last semester of college, I took a course in the history and appreciation of art. I had an amazing professor who made an impression on me,” Pappajohn reflected. “Now remember, I’m an immigrant from Greece, and we never had money to put art in our house.” Because of this, art harbored a corner of his mind and a place in his heart. After college, John married Mary Limberis, an interior designer who shared his newfound interest in art. Mary said as newlyweds they didn’t own much furniture, but they managed to buy some art. “When we were first married, we took a walk here in Des Moines. We went into a gallery and bought a print for $50,” remembered Pappajohn. “From that point, we loved art. The symbolism of this to us is that the art reminds us of our roots, from whence we came. It’s all we had at the time.” The Pappajohns still own their $50 print, but they have bought, sold, traded, and donated hundreds of prints, paintings, and sculptures throughout the last half century. Art acquisitions have connected Pappajohn with the high-profile art world. He has served on museum boards from The Des Moines Art Center to The Whitney, from the Hirschhorn to the National Gallery. Pappajohn has continued his own art education through self-study. He owns and studies over 1000 art-related books.

ART AS A BUSINESS INVESTMENT

Though he does not calculate his art investments as closely as his business dealings, Pappajohn pays attention to timing. “Art is fragile,” he says. “It’s not a necessity, so in hard times, it’s the first thing to go, but then art prices go down.”

“Sometimes the value of a piece fluctuates with events in the artist’s life. We like to put the history with the art,” explained Pappajohn. “Often to learn of the history, there must be a personal connection. This is why building relationships in the art world is very essential. For example, I was told the girlfriend of Mark Rothko had a painting he had given her prior to his death. When Rothko died, she was in need of money, and wanted to sell the piece.”

“Rothko’s work had always been colorful, but this one was done the year he died. His colors went to gray before he died,” said Pappajohn. “I was able to later sell the work for 20 times what I paid for it.”

As he considered history and timing in the business of art, Pappajohn also consulted history and timing in his business dealings. “I make money when my companies go public or when I sell them. Then, I use my business cash flow to buy art,” explained Pappajohn. “In this way, business buys art and art becomes a business investment.”

SHARING HIS PASSION

“My mother used to tell us kids ‘the more you give, the more God’s going to give you back.’ My father, who had his little grocery store in Mason City, would bring immigrants and the hungry home for lunch, and my mother would figure out how to feed them all, so we knew how to give.”

Pappajohn likes to tell the story of when his mother read in the newspaper that her son had made his first million dollars. “Honey, why don’t you stop working?” she asked her son.

Pappajohn just kept working; his business thrived, his art acquisitions multiplied, and as a result, Pappajohn was able to share. As soon as his walls were covered with art, he and his wife began collecting and placing large sculptural pieces in their yard. “On Sunday mornings, a stream of cars would drive by our house to see our sculptures.”

“Sometimes kids would jump out and have their pictures taken next to our giant bronze rabbit, a spoof on Rodin’s famous Thinker pose.” Visitors often wandered into Pappajohn’s back yard, which held sculptural overflow from the front. One day Pappajohn and his wife were driving down Locust Street and noticed buildings were being demolished. “Honey, I have an idea,” said Pappajohn. “We are going to build a sculpture park here.”

In September 2009, The John and Mary Pappajohn Sculpture Park opened in Des Moines with more than two dozen sculptures worth millions, a direct result of the couple’s desire to share. The Pappajohns continue to donate art to The Whitney, The Guggenheim, The Hirschhorn and other major museums. “Philanthropy is just part of what we do. When we give a piece to a museum, we know that thousands will see it,” said Pappajohn. “There is a thrill in sharing.”
“Art is an integral part of business. Whether it is in the design of a business logo, furniture, product packaging, a business card or the pictures and sculptures that grace a building, art surrounds us and enhances our lives. We are grateful to be able to enjoy these gifts within our daily work space.”

– Leslie Wilson, Dean of UNIBusiness

Fresh art in Curris and a new sculpture in front of Business & Community Services are gifts to UNI from individuals who name UNIBusiness an important chapter in their careers and lives.

For Lois Iseminger, attending UNI was a family tradition. “My grandmother attended UNI when it was called Iowa State Normal School; my aunts, when it was Iowa State Teachers College,” said Lois Iseminger.

Her sisters and other relatives also attended either State College of Iowa or UNI, depending upon the year. After earning her accounting degree in 1971, then her CPA in 1972, Iseminger’s engagement with UNIBusiness was limited, she admits, until 2010, when her interest in art brought her back.

Lois Iseminger is the former owner of Iseminger and Associates. She built a career in auditing, taxation and quality control. Owning and partnering with firms from Iowa to Chicago,
Peter and Lynda Goulet, former strategy professors, fused their art and business passions in a similar way.

The Goulets retired to the Kansas City area in 2007 but were eager to stay connected to UNI, a place where they had forged many relationships and created lasting memories. Together, the couple’s years at UNI total more than 53.

Peter Goulet held the T. Wayne Davis Chair in Entrepreneurship from 1996 to 1997. He was also the initial director of the John Pappajohn Entrepreneurial Center.

“Peter shared Pappajohn’s love of art,” added Noreen Hermansen, vice-president in the UNI Foundation.

“I am surprised at how much color I’ve chosen”

In August of 2010, Iseminger returned to UNI’s campus to deliver a lecture entitled “UNI Accounting Blends with Art.” The talk celebrated the donation of her entire collection of 140 pieces of art and more than 150 art publications to the University of Northern Iowa. UNI curator, Darryl Taylor, selected numerous pieces to place in the Curris Business Building.

“The positive comments about the new art in the building have been very gratifying,” said Wilson. “I now have faculty and staff saying, ‘There is an empty wall here. Can you do something about it?’”

“The art is for students, instructors, administrative staff, and visitors,” explained Iseminger. “They may be a respite or an inspiration. They are to provide a visual break while being a stimulus.” Lois Iseminger considers her art donations a continuation of her family’s deep connection to UNI: a colorful lifetime legacy.
Summer 2015 brought Colombian MBA students and Chinese undergraduates to Iowa as part of UNIBusiness’ growing summer globalization program.

It is quickly establishing UNIBusiness as a favorite destination for universities around the globe who seek international business experience for their students.

“Our EAFIT University partnership started a number of years ago,” said Chris Schrage, UNIBusiness Global Opportunities Coordinator. EAFIT faculty have taught in UNI’s MBA program, and Schrage has taught at EAFIT twice. “Summer program attendees are MBA students who have met special English proficiency requirements. The program has had significant growth. In our first year we hosted nine students; in 2015 we welcomed 33 Colombian students,” Schrage added.

The UNIBusiness 2015 EAFIT program kicked off with a three-day study of negotiation and mediation taught by Robert Himshoot, an experienced arbitration and negotiation consultant. The schedule also included business culture by Dr. Robert Krueger, Emeritus Professor of Portuguese.

EAFIT students attended UNIBusiness’ Annual MBA Capstone Conference to observe the MBA Capstone project presentations, a culmination of a semester’s analysis of a specific business concern. “EAFIT students were engaged members of the audience,” said Dale Cyphert, facilitator of the Capstone course. “They asked questions and engaged with our faculty and MBA students in the discussion of each project and completed written reviews,” added Cyphert.

When not in the classroom, the Colombian students toured nine area companies. Bruce Westemeier, Manager of Warren Transport, and Kevin Harberts, CEO of Kryton Metals, were guest speakers on campus later in the week. EAFIT University students divided into teams and completed in-depth investigations of the American businesses they had visited. They ended their Iowa stay with formal presentations, sharing results of team findings.

Student Juan Manuel Arango Aguirre, was impressed with the candor of large American companies. “I learned that Pella Corporation has more in sales than the largest soft drink company in Colombia,” said Arango in an interview with their CFO. Arango Aguirre is the Finance Coordinator for a 120-employee Colombian construction company.

“I learned that Pella Corporation has more in sales than the largest soft drink company in Colombia.”

EAFIT’s new MBA director, Sascha Fuerst, was surprised by his first trip to Iowa, Cedar Falls, and UNI. “We have been provided with an extremely well-organized, fascinating, and as some students expressed it, ‘life changing’ experience. It is not only to see how business is done in a different economic environment but also to experience the cultural, social environment.” Fuerst intends to build upon the UNI/Business/EAFIT relationship. “So far, the study trip is only offered to our MBA students at our main campus in Medellin. Next year, the trip will also be offered to our students in the cities of Bogotá and Pereira.”

Lisa Jepsen, Associate Dean, addressed the Colombian MBA students at a farewell dinner. “You should be proud of yourselves,” said Jepsen. “When I listened to your presentations earlier today, I was impressed that in two weeks you have learned what can take a semester to learn about the American companies you studied.”

“It is customary for MBA programs to send students away on an international experience, and we would like to be a destination of choice for such programs. It is gratifying to see that EAFIT has selected UNI and Iowa. Considering the high caliber of professionals enrolled in their program, this is definitely a mutually beneficial arrangement,” added Farzad Moussavi, Director of Global Programs. >>
GLOBAL TRADE PROGRAM

UNI Business and Shanghai Dianji University (SDJU) now celebrate a decade long partnership. The relationship started in 2004 at a meeting in Shanghai between former Dean Farzad Moussavi and SDJU leaders. Subsequently, Shanghai joined the growing list of international locations, and Dianji professors can now be visiting scholars at UNI Business. A student leadership exchange takes UNI Business students to Shanghai, and many SDJU students now earn UNI degrees. One of the newer developments of the UNI/SDJU partnership is The Global Trade Program.

“The Global Trade program is in its second year and was developed to provide SDJU students with a global cross-cultural learning opportunity in the US,” said Schrage. Students are engaged in a Global Competency course each morning, working toward earning NASBITE’s Certified Global Business Professional (CGBP) credential. The CGBP credential confirms knowledge in international trade and assures employees are able to practice global business at the professional level required in today’s global economy.

“Because of Dianji’s partnership with UNI, I really know my professors here.”

Afternoons are reserved for English classes and visits to area businesses. Seven Iowa businesses, large and small, have partnered with UNI Business and opened their doors to the scrutiny of the Global Trade students.

The program also seeks to provide cross-cultural learning, which requires engagement with U.S. students. “In addition to the students who come from Dianji and UNI, we also have students from our new articulation partner, Santa Ana Community College in California,” explained Schrage. Santa Ana Community College students enhance the cultural exchange by adding a West Coast, predominately Hispanic, perspective to Midwestern and Chinese students. For Santa Ana student Carlos Palma, cultural exposure spilled beyond Iowa’s borders. “I learned about diversity,” said Palma, who spent most of his life as a Californian. “I now realize the way you see the world is entirely different when you meet another culture such as the Chinese.” Palma plans to finish his associate degree at Santa Ana and then transfer to UNI Business to earn a degree in Supply Chain Management.

Accustomed to Shanghai city life, Bobby Sun, from Dianji, was pleasantly surprised with UNI’s quiet summer campus. “The experience of coming here gave me more confidence,” said Sun, who will earn a marketing degree in Shanghai and then aim for a masters in Sports Management. “Because of Dianji’s partnership with UNI, I really know my professors here,” said Sun. “I will miss them when I am back in China.”

Dean Leslie Wilson addressed the Global Trade students at their farewell gathering and focused on the cross-cultural relationships formed through the SDJU/Santa Ana/UNI partnerships. “It is important that we stay connected as business professionals,” said Wilson. “The stronger the economic ties, the less likelihood that the countries will go to war with each other. So here at UNI, together, we are contributing toward world peace one international friendship at a time.”
A Decade of Shared Success

In 2005, leaders of two highly respected institutions created a forward-thinking partnership that has flourished in its first decade.

When former UNI Business Dean Farzad Moussavi visited Shanghai Dianji University for the first time in 2004 and met President Jianguo Xia and SDJU’s other leaders, he was most impressed by the university’s orientation toward action and collective capacity to execute. He knew from the start that good things would happen.

In the first decade:

- More than a DOZEN UNI Business faculty have gained global experience by teaching at SDJU, adding Shanghai to the list of major business hubs in which they have taught.
- Nearly 30 UNI Business students have visited SDJU as part of student leadership exchange program.
- More than 70 SDJU students have enrolled at UNI and many received degrees from UNI.
- 12+ SDJU professors have gained first-hand experience with the American approach to business education as visiting scholars to UNI.
- The partnership has grown as an incubator for many innovative initiatives, most of which have engaged other institutions from around the world.

A solid foundation is in place for the relationship to grow for years to come!
Their gift is sure to energize our international efforts, but what, you might wonder, does it mean to “hold a chair?” In my previous role as UNI Business dean, I learned that most people are curious about this question, but they have only foggy ideas about an answer. Now that I hold the Bradford Chair, I will offer my answer.

UNI proudly appeals to Iowa students, most of whom come to us with little or no international experience. Yet a growing number of employers, in Iowa and beyond, demand global intelligence and sophistication. We pay particular attention to the worrisome gap between where our students are when they join us and where we want them to be when they graduate. Closing the international gap has been a UNI Business strategic priority. In just five years, the portion of our students with a substantial international experience has gone up from 1 in 20 to 1 in 5, and over 60% of our faculty members have taught in at least one international location. Progress is evident, but we have much loftier goals.

“We have an ambitious goal for the Bradford Chair .... Nothing short of bringing us global recognition as an incubator for innovation in international business education.”

– Dean Leslie Wilson

Many friends of UNI share our passion for internationalization. When UNIBusiness priorities are aligned with donor passions, we have a healthy foundation to build on. Then when a donor makes the decision to give – say, $1,000,000 to establish an endowed chair – the school gains the privilege of bestowing a coveted academic honor on a member of its faculty. With that privilege comes an obligation; donors so passionate about a cause that they are willing to make a large investment with no prospect of financial returns can be properly rewarded only by moving the cause forward. That progress, of course, requires a genuine commitment from both the school and the chaired professor. I call this the institutional obligation to the donor.

To meet that institutional obligation in research institutions, the holder of a newly established chair will largely depart the classroom to focus on advancing research in the field; research and publication are the goals for that chair. At UNI, on the other hand, our institutional obligation gives the chair holder an entirely different focus. To meet my obligation as holder of a chair in international business, I must show tangible evidence that our students’ global vision is broadening, in part as a result of the Bradfords’ strategic investment. To us, the ultimate question always must be: Are our students now better off?

Beyond the institutional obligation, my commitment to the Bradford Chair has a decidedly personal motivation. I have known the Bradfords for quite some time. I have had long conversations with them. Bob’s entrepreneurial drive across the globe and Margaret’s life-long sense of discovery have been inspirational to me, both professionally and personally. My whole family has come to admire their curiosity, sense of adventure and personal warmth. Bob’s sudden passing in February affected us as a family loss would. So the Bradford Chair represents a personal obligation for me, and I intend to fulfill that obligation the best I can.

Now that I’ve stepped away from the dean’s office, the Bradford Chair is my platform to lead our internationalization efforts. For that opportunity I will always be grateful to Margaret Bradford and the late Robert Bradford.

The University of Northern Iowa conferred degrees to 45 MBA candidates during a graduation ceremony held in Hong Kong in June, 2015. UNI President William N. Ruud made his first visit to Hong Kong and presided at the ceremony.

Graduates included MBA students in the Hong Kong and Guangzhou programs, which are complete MBA programs delivered onsite by UNI faculty in Hong Kong and Guangzhou, China. A commencement celebration is held every two years to celebrate the completion of a new cohort of UNI MBA students.

“The MBA programs in Hong Kong and Guangzhou allow us to add to our international profile by sending our faculty overseas and engaging them with international practitioners,” said Dean Leslie Wilson.

Since starting the program in 2001, more than 40 UNI faculty have traveled to China to teach in the programs. Students are working professionals, with many holding high-level management positions. The UNI MBA program strengthens students’ business knowledge while allowing them to apply that knowledge in their real life business situations. Almost 300 students have graduated from this internationally accredited program in China. In addition to its AACSB accreditation, UNI MBA has been recognized as a Best Business School by The Princeton Review for 9 consecutive years and by U.S. News and World Report as a top 100 part-time MBA program.
Jerry Ask (Management ’80) was named to the 2015 Financial Times Top Advisors list, “FT 400.” This list of the top 400 financial advisors among national, regional, and independent broker/dealers was published March 2015.

A team of UNIBusiness students from the UNI Financial Management Association won the Excellence Award and placed second in the fourth annual Private Business Valuation Challenge. Faculty advisor Brett Olsen guided the team in their endeavor during the fall 2014 and spring 2015 semesters.

The UNIBusiness team was among eight finalists out of 25 teams from 20 universities across the nation. Team members Garrett Ehlke (Finance), Eric Frye (Accounting), Colin Frye (Finance and Real Estate), Jessica Pabst (Economics, Finance and Real Estate), Josh Patience (Finance and Real Estate), Austin Johnk (Finance and Accounting), and Jeff Burtnett (Accounting ’14) used propriety data, information, and expert mentoring from a valuation expert to develop a valuation report for an actual private business.
Singleton Honored for Leadership & Service

Marvin Singleton (Marketing: Advertising & Digital Studies) was honored by the Missouri Valley Conference with a MVC Leadership & Service Award for the 2014-2015 winter season. Singleton was a member of the UNI Panther men’s basketball team and an Athletic Director’s Honor Roll member.

Organization Helps Advance Women in Business

A new student organization, Women in Business (WiB), has been created to help advance women in the business field. Chloe Basa (Management and MIS) and Sydney Wilkens (MIS) started the organization after attending the Iowa Women of Innovation Conference in November 2014.

“The goal is to be a place where members can gain skills and experiences that will better prepare them for the real world and allow them to broaden their horizons in a productive and supportive environment,” Basa said. The group has held workshops for the members that include LinkedIn Utilization, Negotiating Your Salary, Speed Mentoring, and How to Give a Presentation.

WiB grew from an initial membership of 15 to more than 50 in the fall. However, the group continues to focus on growth. “We are looking to install a mentoring program for incoming freshmen and undecided majors within the business school, and we want to increase the number of women in male-dominated majors such as MIS, Economics, and Supply Chain,” added Basa.

UNI Business thanks Peter and Lynda Goulet for their generous donation to support the activities of this student organization.

Rawwas Chosen for James F. Lubker Faculty Research Award

Professor of Marketing Mohammed Rawwas has been named the 2015 winner of the prestigious James F. Lubker Faculty Research Award. The selection is made based on exceptional original contributions to research and scholarship, for which Rawwas’s contributions have been significant.

Since coming to UNI in 1991, Rawwas has produced 45 journal publications and 35 refereed proceedings. In addition, he has contributed to the field of marketing by acting as reviewer for 27 different journals and conferences and serving on 21 dissertation/thesis committees.

UNI Entrepreneurs’ President Recognized for Community Leadership

Michael Caraway (Interactive Digital Studies) received a 2015 Newman Civic Fellow Award from Iowa Campus Compact. The award honors college student leaders who invest in finding solutions for challenges facing communities across the country and create lasting change. It is sponsored by the KPMG Foundation.

Caraway is the president of UNI Entrepreneurs, member of the UNI Business Presidents’ Council and co-founder of Monday Creations, a creative agency focused on creating digital experiences. He has worked hard to build relationships between UNI students and the Cedar Valley community and positively impact the entrepreneurial environment in the area.

On the Iowa Campus Compact website, Caraway states: “One year ago today, I was sitting in my advisor’s office talking about why entrepreneurs always move out of the Cedar Valley. We decided there is no community to support and celebrate entrepreneurs in the Cedar Valley. We decided there is no community to support and celebrate entrepreneurs in the Cedar Valley. It was right then that I knew something had to change.”

Thanks to the generosity of 438 alumni and friends, $40,680 was raised during the 2014-15 phone-a-thon.

To start their careers with a professional edge and a global perspective, this fund allows the College to offer scholarships and extracurricular opportunities to help more of our students. A gift makes a difference!

If you still need to fulfill your pledge or would like to make an additional gift to UNI Business, you can also give online at business.uni.edu/deansfund.

Please call alumni to invite them to contribute to the Dean's Fund for Excellence. UNIBusiness thanks 393 alumni and friends who gave gifts from $1 to $99. Large or small, every gift makes a difference!

PANTHER PHONE-A-TTHON FUND DRIVE RESULTS

Each year, UNIBusiness student calls invite students to contribute to the Dean's Fund for Excellence. This fund allows the College to offer scholarships and extracurricular opportunities to help more of our students start their careers with a professional edge and a global perspective.

Thanks to the generosity of 438 alumni and friends, $40,680 was raised during the 2014-15 phone-a-thon. If you still need to fulfill your pledge or would like to make an additional gift to UNIBusiness, contact Senior Director of Development Michelle Roussek at 800-782-9522, 319-273-4444 or michelle.roussek@uni.edu. You can also give online at business.uni.edu/deansfund.
Thank you for the example you set for our students. It is important for them to learn and understand part of their role as future alumni is to give back to UNI, just as you do.

We try to teach them every gift really does matter. As part of our student philanthropy program last year, we displayed a variety of banners around campus to highlight the generosity from UNI alumni and friends. To reflect the impact on UNI Business students in 2014-15, we chose a message to reflect the collective good that can be done by being part of a fundraising effort. In the lobby of the Curris Business Building, a four- by eight-foot sign read:

“One year. 1,200 donors. $1.9 million … for professional certifications, scholarships, international travel, competitions and internships. Panthers Pay it Forward.”

Our intention was to illustrate you don’t have to be wealthy to help students. You have an integral role in our annual campaign to provide important opportunities on and off campus for UNI Business students. Establish a named fund for the purpose you designate. Or contribute to the Dean’s Fund for Excellence where allocations are made to cover airfare, conference registration, study materials and exam fees for certifications, hotel costs for competitions, and more.

Another component of the student philanthropy program is “Love a Donor.” This is a thank-you writing campaign that shows students are learning fundraising lessons. Their notes express passion and gratitude as they share what it means to them to have the professional development opportunities your support provides.

You have experienced the joy of giving. Thank you for helping our students experience what it feels like to be a beneficiary of that generosity. If I can assist you with your next gift, please contact me at 800-782-9522, 319-273-4444 or michelle.rourke@uni.edu.

2015 Donor Spotlight

There are as many reasons for giving back to the University as there are donors. The stories behind that philanthropy this year are no exception. Here are a few that highlight the range of those stories for 2015.

Michael Armbrecht Endowed Honors Scholarship

Michael Armbrecht (Accounting ’90) was a member of UNI’s first group of prestigious Presidential Scholars, as well as a Merit Scholar and Resident Scholar. He was actively involved on campus as a Student Alumni Ambassador, writing tutor, house officer in residence hall government, member of Omicron Delta Kappa, and participant in intramurals. His time on campus was exceptional and at graduation he was awarded the Lux Service Medallion to recognize his academic excellence and substantial service to the university.

Remembering the impact scholarships made on his ability to be actively engaged in campus life, Armbrecht established an endowed scholarship designated for a high achieving student – one in the University Honors Program - who has demonstrated leadership through campus activities. For the commitment shown to UNI through this substantial gift, Michael was presented with the 2015 UNI President’s Emerging Philanthropist Award.

Michael began his career at Honeywell as an internal auditor. He traveled extensively worldwide and held a series of positions with increasing responsibility, including CFO of Honeywell’s Defense Aftermarket Americas Division in Arizona. He is now CFO of Technology Solutions in Columbia, MD. Michael holds an MBA from the University of Chicago.

UNIBusiness thanks Michael Armbrecht for establishing the Michael Armbrecht Endowed Honors Scholarship.

Aegon/Transamerica Technology & Analytics Lab

Like other employers, Aegon/Transamerica is increasingly asking that new hires have the skills, knowledge, and experience to work with big data. When UNI Business asked that they consider supporting a new technology and data analytics lab just for that purpose, Aegon/Transamerica invested.

Specifically, the funding will expand the curriculum to include business analytics, update a physical space to provide a technology rich, collaborative work environment, create a simulated trading room with up-to-date, industry-relevant software, and provide faculty enrichment opportunities to fully utilize and teach the technologies and analytic skills demanded of graduates within their individual fields.

This gift builds on a partnership with UNI that dates back to the 1980s, anchored in Aegon/Transamerica’s desire to support programs that provide the company with well-prepared interns and new hires every year. Over 250 UNI graduates are currently employed at Aegon/Transamerica, making it a top employer of our alumni, a great number of whom are UNI Business graduates. In addition, UNI is Aegon/Transamerica’s second largest source for intern hires out of more than 20 universities.

UNIBusiness thanks Aegon/Transamerica for its generous gift to establish the Aegon/Transamerica Technology & Analytics Lab.
Jim and Barbara Hanisch

Jim Hanisch (’74 Economics) has UNI roots that run deep, beginning with his mother and aunt. In the 1920’s, Bessie and Helen Hamil moved to Cedar Falls with their parents and attended the Training School (predecessor to the Price Laboratory School). Iowa State Teacher’s College was where Helen graduated in 1929 followed by Bessie in 1932. Helen went on to teach in Waverly, IA and Freeport, IL. Bessie married Harold Hanisch. For both, education remained a priority. The Hanisch children, Jane and Jim, attended Price Laboratory School and graduated from UNI. When Jim and his wife Barbara created the Hanisch and Hamil Scholarship, it was to honor almost a century of strong family ties to education and to UNI.

The Hanisch and Hamil Scholarship is awarded to a UNIBusiness senior from Iowa with preference for a student with a Business Teaching major or a student with a major in Economics. Jim began his career at Norwest Bank (now Wells Fargo) and has built 35 years of experience in financial services, technology, operations, sales, and customer service. He is currently the Executive Vice President of Network Operations and Corporate Development at CO-OP in Rancho Cucamonga, CA where he leads the company’s technology development and strategic planning division.

“This scholarship has relieved me of a huge financial burden this year. Instead of worrying about how I am going to pay for tuition, I instead can focus on my studies. The generosity of Mr. and Mrs. Hanisch has inspired me even more to give back to this amazing school.” – Megan Hahn

UNIBusiness thanks Jim and Barbara Hanisch for establishing the Hanisch and Hamil Scholarship.

Moussavi Faculty Development Fund

How do you honor someone who has done so much? This was a key question for the Dean’s Executive Advisory Board members before they attended their spring meeting—the last to be presided over by Dean Farzad Moussavi before he returned to the faculty. Moussavi consistently stressed that providing opportunities for faculty to stay current in their fields, pursue their own professional development opportunities and have the resources to support their research can really make a difference in the education delivered and in the accreditation earned. Executive Advisory Board members decided that was exactly what they would do to thank Dean Moussavi for his leadership. Collectively they have contributed over $10,000 to establish the Moussavi Faculty Development Fund.

UNIBusiness thanks the Dean’s Executive Advisory Board for establishing the Moussavi Faculty Development Fund.

Faculty Recognition

Accounting Professor Receives Award for Going Above and Beyond

Gerald Smith, Professor of Accounting, was honored with a 2015 UNI Above and Beyond Award from the Northern Iowa Student Government and Center for Excellence in Teaching and Learning.

“I am very honored and humbled to receive this award,” Smith said. “I love helping students make decisions; to see students accomplish their academic and career goals is very rewarding.”

“I nominated Gerald for his dedication and commitment outside of his classrooms,” said Erick Martin (Sociology). “Two years ago he accepted the offer to become the faculty advisor for Sigma Alpha Epsilon. During his time as advisor, he has taken a very active and supportive role with the gentlemen of the fraternity. Gerald has gone far beyond the responsibilities of the job and has become an indispensable part of the fraternity. He takes the same, if not more, dedication and care with the fraternity men as he does with his students. Gerald has performed duties far beyond what was required as a professor and an advisor. I, along with many other UNI students, am lucky to have him in my life, and I have been privileged to know him as a supervisor and as a friend.”

UNIBusiness Professor Named Marketing Educator of the Year

Dennis Clayson was named the Marketing Educator of the Year by the Marketing Educator’s Association (MEA), which is the highest award given by this international organization. MEA is the premiere international organization for marketing faculty development. It provides worldwide leadership in promoting the development and sharing of scholarships that enhance marketing education and advance marketing knowledge and practice.

The MEA also sponsors the Journal of Marketing Education, which is the leading journal in the area of marketing education. Clayson has published extensively in the Journal of Marketing Education and in 2011 was named one of the top five most-published authors in the field of marketing education and the number one most prolific author in the journal.

“The Marketing Educator’s Association represents some very dedicated teachers who are masters at what they do,” Clayson said. “It demonstrates that what we do as teachers at UNI is recognized on a national level.”

Nicholas (Nick) Bailey
Assistant Professor of Management

Nick Bailey joined the management department this fall after completing his PhD in International Business at the University of South Carolina. He has previously taught courses in International Business and Strategic Management at the University of North Carolina-Charlotte and Economics at Utah Valley University. Prior to his PhD, Bailey was a project manager for AidData, a non-governmental organization funded by the Hewlett and Gates Foundations, and a political risk analyst at The PRS Group.

Along with his PhD, Bailey has masters degrees in public administration and economics from Syracuse University, and a bachelors degree in political science from Brigham Young University. He has significant international experience and is fluent in Spanish. Bailey’s current research focuses on the strategic relationship between businesses and government in an international context.

Bailey loves to golf and is an avid college football fan who is loyal to the BYU Cougars and South Carolina Gamecocks. He and his wife are the parents of five boys.
Economics Professor Wins Academic Advising Award

Bryce Kanago was awarded the MidWestOne Bank Academic Advising Award. Several nomination letters were submitted by fellow professors and students. Kanago’s impact on his students is highlighted in the story of Alicia Rosburg.

Kanago began advising Alicia when she was a sophomore the fall of 2003. Over the next few years, Kanago advised Alicia on coursework in pursuing a PhD in Economics. During her senior year, he encouraged Alicia to apply for the McElroy Fellowship and was instrumental in her preparation. Alicia was selected as UNI’s candidate and was awarded $10,000 a year for up to three years in her pursuit of a PhD in a liberal arts field. In 2006, she was accepted and enrolled at Iowa State University where Kanago continued to offer encouragement and advice. When she was working on her thesis, Kanago invited her to present a seminar to the Economics Department at UNI. The next year when the department had an opening, Alicia was hired. Tenure track faculty are assigned mentors to provide advice, encouragement, direction, and serve as a confidant, and Kanago once again serves as Alicia’s mentor.

Wilson Receives Advertising MVP Award

UNIBusiness marketing instructor and UNI-AAF faculty advisor Matthew Wilson was awarded the 2015 MVP Award by the Cedar Valley professional chapter of the American Advertising Federation (AAF-CV) during the American Advertising Awards ceremony in February. This recognition was given to Wilson for his “big impact on the local advertising community.” One of Wilson’s former students stated, “Wilson has worked to inspire the next generation of advertising professionals. He guides his students not by telling them what they did wrong, or should do different, but by asking important questions and leading them to the answer.”

Wilson started the AAF chapter at UNI in 2012 and encourages constant professional outreach for students by inviting advertising professionals to speak at meetings, visiting advertising agencies, and securing corporate sponsorships from regional businesses. He also serves as the faculty advisor for the National Student Advertising Competition, coaching three teams in the annual competition.
Developing Professionalism

It is often through the success of others who have had similar experiences that students begin to envision their own personal success. This was one of the many reasons that the college sponsored a two-day event in Chicago, bringing together UNI minority students and minority alumni from across the United States. The event, called the Chicago Connection, focused on building relationships and reuniting old classmates.

Kadesha Zimmerman, UNIBusiness student and co-president of EXCEL, a student organization dedicated to raising the profile of minority students on campus, led the planning. Zimmerman organized several pre-event professional development workshops for the students to hone their networking and conversation skills. “My main goal for the Chicago Connection was to connect alumni to current students so both students and alumni could form a beneficial relationship,” said Zimmerman. In total, 24 students and 82 alumni attended the Chicago Connection.

Tydel Jones, a senior Supply Chain Management major, worked alongside Zimmerman, assisting on the welcome committee. “It was empowering being around successful entrepreneurs, teachers, and lawyers, to name a few. The event gave me the belief that I, too, will graduate and make a difference in the lives of future UNI students,” stated Jones.

Carl Boyd, State Judge of Illinois and 1987 UNI graduate, was one of the 82 alumni in attendance. Mr. Boyd described his experience at the Chicago Connection as “encouraging.”

Event organizers hope to build upon the success of this event. Multicultural students have started to plan more alumni-related events, hoping to rekindle memories for alumni and make connections with their successors.
“The students from UNI had an opportunity to interact with alumni who have experienced success in their chosen profession. It was extremely motivating to students and encouraging alumni to see the legacy of UNI survive,” explained Boyd.

Wells Fargo, a Partner in Advancing Students’ Professionalism

While the Chicago Connection was a series of planned social events bringing students and successful alumni together, the Professional Readiness Program has implemented formal strategies to engage business professionals with our UNI Business students as early as their first semester on campus.

One such strategy is the Wells Fargo Mentorship Program integration into the first level PRP course. More than 150 Wells Fargo employees have mentored more than 1,000 UNI Business students since the partnership began in 2012, which was recognized as a “best practice in business education” by AACSB International during its re-accreditation review of UNI Business in January 2015.

Pat Hellman (Management ’87), Senior Vice President of Capital Markets Loan Operations, provided leadership and vision for this project, through which Wells Fargo Home Mortgage employees have helped UNI Business students improve their communication skills and learn professional phone and email etiquette. Most recently, UNI Business acknowledged Wells Fargo as an Outstanding Corporate Partner to celebrate the AACSB recognition.

“This is an amazing opportunity for our students to practice their phone and email skills in a safe environment and receive high quality mentoring advice from a businessperson,” said Professional Readiness Program (PRP) Director Katie Hillyer (Marketing ’09).

Adam Grimsman (Finance) believes what he learned from this mentorship program will give him a competitive advantage in job interviews and throughout his career.

“I’m grateful to be a part of a university that has programs such as PRP to ensure students are more than qualified for post-college careers,” said Grimsman.
The University of Northern Iowa’s College of Business Administration celebrated achievements and inspired future success during the Class of 2015 Graduation Celebration.

ACCOUNTING

Doug Opheim (Accounting ’80)
Chief Financial Officer
RSM US LLP
Minneapolis, Minnesota

Doug Opheim joined RSM (formerly McGladrey) in 1980 as a staff accountant, was admitted to the partnership in 1988, and joined their board of directors in 1996. In 2010, Opheim was named Chief Financial Officer and served as Executive Partner – Administrative Services, overseeing the National Practice Standards Group. He has been instrumental in streamlining and improving the audit process, merging the firm’s tax and consulting services into H&R Block and in the company’s purchase of RSM McGladrey and securing the bank financing for that acquisition. In his current role, he is also responsible for the firm’s information technology systems. Opheim helped connect UNI Business alumni partners at RSM US LLP to establish the RSM US LLP Professorship in Accounting.

ECONOMICS

Amy Rehder Harris (Economics and Political Science ’95)
Chief Economist and Administrator, Research and Analysis Division
Iowa Department of Revenue
Urbandale, Iowa

After graduating from UNI, Amy Rehder Harris earned her doctorate in economics in 2000 from the University of Maryland, College Park, and started her professional career at the Congressional Budget Office, forecasting long-term finances for Social Security and Medicare and estimating proposed policy changes. She returned to Iowa in 2006 and began working at the Iowa Department of Revenue, developing the Iowa Leading Indicators Index, modernizing the individual income tax micro model, and advancing the econometric tools used to forecast the state’s revenues.

FINANCE

Jamie Freeman (Finance ’93)
Senior Credit Products Officer

Meet UNI’s Associate Vice President of Enrollment Management
When Matthew Kroeger (Management ‘96) joined UNI in July 2014 as the new Associate Vice President (AVP) of Enrollment Management, he brought with him significant leadership experience from Idaho State University, the University of Iowa, Northern Arizona University, and Morningside College. However, it was his undergraduate experience at UNI that initially led him towards a career in higher education.

Through his business education and work experience at the UNI Admissions office, Kroeger was able to identify how the principles regularly applied to admissions counseling and territory management were the same as those used in business. Subsequently, while his classmates were preparing for life in the corporate world, he “wanted to do something a little different.”

Kroeger’s work history involves a variety of institutions, but he sees UNI’s size and focus on undergraduate education and the significant proportion of Iowans among its student population as distinguishing his work experiences here.

UNI’s uniqueness enables Kroeger to pursue both the short- and long-term enrollment goals central to the AVP position. He regularly meets with deans and other college representatives to determine appropriate undergraduate enrollment goals.

It is “critical that enrollment management be a collaborative effort,” Kroeger emphasizes. “No single office or person can do it alone. There is good collaboration between key stakeholders such as admissions, financial aid, the registrar, and academic units that we can build and expand on.”

A Successful Student Does More Than Attend Class

When students want to study a topic in-depth, publish and present their research at national conferences, and gain useful experiences for graduate and law school admission, UNIBusiness is there to help.

Your contributions to the Dean’s Fund for Excellence can fund a student’s attendance at professional conferences, purchase airline tickets for international experiences, buy CFA seminar books, fund a scholarship, and much more.

To contribute, contact Michelle Rourke at 800-782-9523, 319-273-4444 or michelle.rourke@uni.edu, or visit business.uni.edu/deansfund.
