YOUR PLACE IN POLITICS

YOUR VOTE MATTERS.
How you use that vote is up to you.
Hello Panthers,

“Purple for Life!” We hear it, see it and say it often. Do you know if you’re living up to this phrase? Here are some easy ways to check:

1. Does everyone you encounter know you’re a Panther? Wearing Panther gear, a pennant in your office, your water bottle at the gym leave no question where your loyalties lie!
2. Do you constantly encourage high school-age students to check out the great programs at UNI? Have you submitted a few student referral forms to our admission’s office? (uni.edu/admissions/studentreferral)
3. Do your social media feeds include the University of Northern Iowa, Alumni Association, your area UNI Alumni Club, UNI Athletics and several others?
4. Have you volunteered, mentored a student, visited campus and donated to the UNI Foundation?
5. Have we seen you at one of over 80 events across the country this past year?

If you answered “Yes” to any of the above questions, you are living Purple for Life.

The UNI family is just that, a family. We work to support each other in every way possible.

That is why our Alumni Relations team has been hard at work making sure we are supporting you! We are planning events across the country, developing new clubs in Cedar Rapids, Kansas City, and Council Bluffs & Omaha this coming year, hosting weekly career webinars, organizing reunions and many other activities to bring UNI to you! If you have suggestions for ways we can better support you—send them my way at leslie.prideaux@uni.edu.

Purple for Life!

It can be difficult to elude the all-consuming hoopla surrounding a presidential election, especially when you live in Iowa, where the caucus is a focal point for candidates campaigning to sit behind that imposing desk in the Oval Office.

Now that the caucuses are over and the two leading candidates have emerged, the unenviable task of picking one or the other falls to the country’s registered voters.

And if you’ve been following the election, then you know that Hillary Clinton and Donald Trump – the Democratic and Republican nominees, respectively – have been two of the most polarizing presidential candidates in history. Both have garnered historically low favorability ratings, leaving more than a few voters debating whether or not to cast a vote at all come November.

“All of the news surrounding this election cycle is so negative, you hope that it doesn’t discourage [people] from voting,” said Chris Larimer, an associate professor of political science at UNI. “We know that when people are negative about politics or when it gets to the point where the atmosphere around it sort of encourages apathy, then people are less likely to participate, and that is not what you want.”
IN POLITICS

Voters in smaller states like Iowa, which has six electoral votes, have a tendency to dismiss the value of their own vote. But swing states like Iowa are important battlegrounds for presidential candidates, especially when a state like California with 55 electoral votes is not competitive, according to Donna Hoffman, department head and associate professor of political science at UNI.

“In an environment in which presidential elections are won on very small margins in the Electoral College, six or seven electoral votes really matter,” said Hoffman. She and Larimer recently collaborated on a book chapter in “Presidential Swing States: Why Only Ten Matter,” covering the swing state nature of Iowa.

But even for those who understand that every vote matters, how does one make the right choice in an election that has been heavy on rhetoric and short on substance? According to Hoffman, voters just need to do their homework.

“Ideally, as a political scientist, from a good government perspective, what would we like to have happen? We’d like to have citizens do their due diligence. Investigate the candidates, investigate their positions, and weigh their own positions accordingly.”

Regardless of whom you decide to vote for or how you come to that decision, one thing is clear: Your vote matters. How you use that vote is up to you.

And remember: It’ll all be over in November.
A Partnership

AND

a Pledge

Each spring a life-changing event is held on campus that brings tears to the eyes of many participants and audience members. The event is the U.S. Citizenship Ceremony that welcomes dozens of individuals into the land of the free and the home of the brave.

For many, the path to citizenship includes enrolling in a course offered by Hawkeye Community College in Waterloo taught by UNI professors. In a small-group setting, students learn about the discovery of America, the founding fathers, Constitutional amendments, civil rights – basically, U.S. government and history up to the present.

The idea for the course was born in 2014 when Richard Featherstone, UNI’s former interim associate dean of the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences, contacted Hawkeye’s Laura Hidlebaugh about the possibility of offering a course for people who had applied for U.S. citizenship or who planned to apply within the year. As Hawkeye’s English language learning and family literacy coordinator, Hidlebaugh agreed that the idea for the course was worth pursuing and welcomed the partnership opportunity.

The first citizenship course was offered during the 2014 fall semester and was taught by Featherstone, UNI history professor Emily Machen and Lt. Col. Glen Keith, head of UNI’s Department of Military Science/Army ROTC.

“I love my country, and I love civics and history,” said Keith. “Anytime I can get people to pursue citizenship, that’s great.”

The two-hour class is offered each Friday at Hawkeye’s Metro Center in downtown Waterloo. There are usually 17 to 20 students per class, primarily the new wave of refugees from Burma and Congo. There are also a few students from Bosnia, Mexico and South America.

Citizenship applicants aren’t required to take the course, yet it gives them confidence to move forward in the naturalization process, learn English and become better prepared for the citizenship test. The test has 100 questions, 10 of which are chosen by a U.S. immigration officer at U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services in Des Moines who interviews and tests each student.

“Many of the students come from turmoil situations,” said Keith.

“There is a desire in them to become U.S. citizens because they want to make a better life for their children, and they’re willing to do what it takes.”

Citizenship applicants must pass the interview section by answering at least six of the 10 questions correctly. They also must demonstrate their proficiency in writing and reading aloud in English.

“The first thing students want to do when they become U.S. citizens is vote, to exercise their responsibilities,” said Keith. “Most of them have lived in areas that are in turmoil, so voting is something they’re excited to take part in.

“The citizenship course is a great partnership that brings together UNI and Hawkeye expertise,” continued Keith. “What better way to help people who have a huge desire to become U.S. citizens.”

Can You Pass with Flying Colors?

An important part of the application process for becoming a U.S. citizen is passing a civics test. During their interview with a U.S. immigration officer, applicants are asked 10 questions out of a possible 100, and they must answer at least six correctly. Here’s a sampling of what may be asked. How would you fare?

1. The idea of self-government is in the first three words of the Constitution. What are these words?
   a. Life, Liberty, Happiness
   b. Be it Resolved
   c. We the People
   d. Make no law

2. What is the economic system in the United States?
   a. Capitalist
   b. Socialist
   c. Communist
   d. Barter

3. During the Cold War, what was the main concern of the United States?
   a. Unemployment
   b. Communism
   c. Hunger
   d. National Parks

4. How many amendments does the Constitution have?
   a. 25
   b. 26
   c. 27
   d. 28

5. Who is the current chief justice of the United States?
   a. Clarence Thomas
   b. Ruth Bader Ginsburg
   c. William Rehnquist
   d. John G. Roberts, Jr.

Answers: 1 – c. 2 – a. 3 – b. 4 – c. 5 – d.
The world is an open door, and college students are standing on the threshold.

Never before have there been more international opportunities for college students; potential employers see international experience as a qualification in hiring college graduates. Not only is studying abroad beneficial to one’s resume, traveling broadens the mind, grows compassion and allows the person to see the world through a new lens.

UNI’s Study Abroad Center and Capstone courses offer a variety of ways to see the world. Check out some of the places UNI students, faculty and staff visited during the summer.
But if not for an eleventh-hour change of heart, Waggoner would be without the education that has led him to a life and career he only ever dreamed was possible.

As a high school senior who grew up in the Cedar Valley, the idea of spending another four or five years in his hometown did not appeal to Waggoner. He was eager to spread his wings, and Luther College was where he was going to do that.

But it was not to be.

“Something in me knew that I wanted to have the best possible music education if I was going to ever be competitive in a place like New York City,” Waggoner said. “Luther was a good school, but I knew the faculty at UNI and how world class they were.”

And how is he feeling about that decision all these years later?

“I ended up spending the best five years of my life in the last place I expected to.”

Since graduating from UNI, Waggoner has spent much of his adult life in New York City, where he earned his master’s degree in musical theatre writing from New York University. His last four years have been spent working as the director of music for the Pace University Musical Theater Bachelor of Fine Arts program, but he has also collected the titles of composer, lyricist, vocal coach and violinist.

One of his proudest achievements is without a doubt “Presto Change-O,” a full-production musical that was commissioned by the Barrington Stage Company. Waggoner first began writing “Presto Change-O” in March of 2014 with his collaborator, Eric Price, but the pair endured two more years of readings and rewrites before their musical finally saw the stage.

“Presto Change-O” is the first musical I’ve written that has gotten a full production,” Waggoner said. “Getting a full production of a musical is not easy and can take up to 7-10 years sometimes. I’m fully aware that something like this may never come around again, so I have been pinching myself most of the time.”

Even though more than a thousand miles separate Waggoner from Cedar Falls, he credits his education at UNI with driving much of his current success.

“I am so grateful for the experiences that I was able to have at UNI,” Waggoner said. “I received a multi-dimensional education at UNI. I am digging back into my college education every single day. My education from UNI is the gift that keeps on giving.”

“Presto Change-O” completed its initial run on June 11, but Waggoner is hopeful that he’ll be able to secure a larger and more commercial production. He’ll be stepping away from his position at Pace University this fall with the self-imposed challenge to continue to make a name for himself as a freelance writer and performer.

His friends at UNI wait with anticipation to see what he accomplishes next.
The phone on Susann Ahrabi-Fard’s desk is silent. It’s a welcome break for her and other epidemiologists responding to the Zika virus epidemic that started in Brazil and is spreading rapidly.

Taking advantage of the few quiet moments, Ahrabi-Fard heats up the frozen lunch she threw in her bag that morning. But lunch will have to wait. A local health department is calling to report a case of meningitis in a high school student, and the community is panicking.

Ahrabi-Fard, B.S. ’91, M.S. ’96, is a communicable disease epidemiologist for the Wisconsin Department of Health Services (DHS). During her 18 years at DHS, Ahrabi-Fard has served as the invasive bacteria surveillance coordinator (sepsis and meningitis) and is part of the specialized team that conducts surveillance, investigations and outbreak response for more than 70 reportable conditions in Wisconsin. She is also part of the on-call staff that provides 24-hour coverage for public health emergencies. A typical call may come from an emergency department seeking guidance for rabies testing and prophylaxis because a patient was bit by a bat or stray dog.

Ahrabi-Fard has worked on investigations she never thought she would see: the only outbreak of monkeypox outside of Africa, spread by infected prairie dogs through an unregulated exotic pet trade industry; the analysis of hundreds of specimens submitted for anthrax testing after five deaths caused by the intentional contamination of mail following 9/11. More recently, she was involved in a yearlong monitoring system of 250-plus returning travelers from Ebola-affected countries.

Zika virus is the newest emerging disease her department is responding to. It is spread primarily through the bite of an infected Aedes species mosquito, but also from infected males through sexual contact. The virus can pass from a pregnant woman to her fetus and cause severe fetal brain defects such as microcephaly.

Ahrabi-Fard was well prepared for her work with communicable diseases. After graduating from UNI, she was selected as an Emerging Infectious Disease Laboratory Fellow with the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC). During her 18-month fellowship between the CDC and the Wisconsin State Laboratory of Hygiene (WSLH), she trained in virology, tuberculosis, sexually transmitted diseases and the laboratory technique called pulsed-field gel electrophoresis.

Post-fellowship, she was hired by her current employer, which works hand in hand with the WSLH and CDC to conduct surveillance, outbreak investigations and disease response.

“I have found a fascinating career that I love to talk about,” she said. “This is truly my dream job!”
Every April, more than 250 college football players are selected in the NFL Draft, affording each of them the opportunity to take their talents to the next level. Premier college football programs like Alabama, Ohio State and USC tend to dominate the proceedings year in and year out, with rosters chock full of pro prospects primed to make an immediate impact in the NFL.

THEN THERE IS UNI.
UNI is not Alabama, Ohio State or USC. High school seniors don’t commit to play football for UNI with the expectation that they’ll be headed to the NFL in three or four years. But that doesn’t mean they won’t have that opportunity.

Since 1966, 19 UNI football players have been drafted to the NFL. On top of that, 22 former Panthers have been signed as undrafted free agents. Currently, there are seven active UNI Panthers in the NFL.

Not bad for a football program operating out of a small college town in Iowa.

Cornerback Deiondre’ Hall is the Panthers’ most recent export to the NFL, having been drafted by the Chicago Bears in the fourth round of April's 2016 NFL Draft.

In 2015, the Arizona Cardinals drafted running back David Johnson in the third round of the NFL Draft. Johnson proceeded to have a spectacular rookie season, becoming the first player in NFL history to score a rushing touchdown, receiving touchdown and kickoff-return touchdown in his first two games.

Tight end Austin Howard, defensive tackle James Jones, center Brad Meester and linebacker Bryce Paup are among the former Panther football players who have had standout careers after being drafted to the NFL.

Howard has developed into an offensive guard and secured a spot as the right guard for the Oakland Raiders. Jones never missed a single game in his 10-year career with four different teams. Meester started at left guard and center for the Jacksonville Jaguars over the course of a 14-year career. Paup was a four-time Pro Bowl selection as a member of the Green Bay Packers and the Buffalo Bills.

Super Bowl-winning quarterback Kurt Warner, arguably the most famous Panther to play in the NFL, went undrafted in the 1994 NFL Draft. It wasn’t until 1998 that he signed with the St. Louis Rams and began his decade-long career in the NFL.

While larger and more prominent college football programs will no doubt continue to outpace UNI in terms of quantity of players drafted, there is no questioning the quality of the players that the Panthers are sending to the NFL.
Omega Psi Phi Fraternity, Inc. (ΩΨΦ), one of the nine traditionally African-American Greek organizations within the National Pan-Hellenic Council, was initially founded at UNI in 1975; the group reestablished a membership base on campus in spring 2016.

Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity, Inc. (ΚΑΨ) and Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Inc. (ΔΣΘ), historically African-American groups, and Sigma Lambda Gamma (ΣΛΓ), a historically Latina-based sorority, have interest groups on campus that are also seeking members this fall.

“Over the past four to five years, our chapters have doubled in size to around 80 members,” said Steffoni Schmidt, program coordinator of community service and Greek life. “The community has been talking about expanding for a few years. We wanted to make sure the community was strong before adding new chapters.”

ΑΣΤ had a three-year presence on campus before becoming inactive in 1971. Schmidt said the sorority’s return provides an opportunity for women to affiliate with a group if they have not yet found their home within UNI’s current sororities.

Purchasing or leasing a chapter house is not a concern for the sorority’s national office at this time. Instead, Schmidt said discussion is underway with UNI’s Department of Residence about the possibility of members living together on the same residence hall floor.

Starting and building a new chapter takes a special kind of student. “The women who will be recruited have to have an entrepreneurial spirit,” said Schmidt.

“They have to be strong leaders, ready learners and committed to getting a new group up to speed and healthy in a concentrated timeframe.”

Men with an entrepreneurial spirit are also being sought for membership in UNI’s newest fraternity, Pi Lambda Phi (also known as Pilam, pronounced Pie-lamb). The fraternity does not yet have a chapter house, but just like the women of ΑΣΤ, the Pilams may have the opportunity to live together on a residence hall floor.

“We were looking for the right fit, the right fraternity, right now,” said Gabe Gravert, president of UNI’s Interfraternity Council. “The Elimination of Prejudice is Pilam’s philanthropic focus, which makes the fraternity a good fit for UNI because of the university’s focus on diversity.”

“Within Fraternity & Sorority Life at UNI, students can find a home away from home and have a greater chance for leadership and service opportunities,” said Schmidt. “The new chapters will offer students even greater opportunities to do so.”
What is the perfect birthday gift for a mother who reached a milestone birthday of 90? A mother who quit school at age 13 to raise her siblings, who earned her high school diploma at age 36 and went on to develop a successful career traveling internationally? A mother who epitomizes determination with her never-give-up attitude?

Rex Karsten, UNI professor of management information systems (MIS), found the answer as he was preparing an annual report of his activities as the Nationwide Mutual Insurance Company Professor. It occurred to him that he could pay it forward. He said, “My mom has always been my hero. She never gives up and she passed that trait on to me. That is why I wanted to honor her in a way that would also encourage young women to pursue a career in a field that they wouldn’t typically enter.”

Rex’s wife, Laurie, suggested he pay it forward with a scholarship. The inaugural Ethel M. Karsten MIS Scholarship was awarded to Roni Storjohann. Storjohann is a senior from Maysville, Iowa, majoring in management information systems. “I am honored to receive this scholarship,” said Storjohann. “Professor Karsten introduced me to MIS. I thank him for that and for helping me seek new opportunities and always being there to answer questions.”

Katie Hillyer, director of the UNI Business Professional Readiness Program, served on the scholarship selection committee. She said, “The selection committee was impressed with Roni’s resume and clear interest in pursuing a career in MIS. She excelled as a student and leader during her time at Scott Community College and has shown promise of continuing on that trajectory during her time at UNI.”

This past summer, Storjohann held an internship position with Alcoa ATI’s Information Systems Department in Bettendorf. For the 2016-17 academic year, Storjohann secured an internship with UNI’s Department of Institutional Research as a student analyst. She said she is excited to use the skills she has learned in the classroom in both of these positions.

That’s exactly what Professor Karsten had in mind. “Historically, women have been underrepresented in technology-related majors, so I hope this is one small way to ensure more consider this major.” He is also looking forward to introducing Storjohann to his mother at the annual Scholarship Appreciation Luncheon.
UNI has a distinguished history of providing academic opportunities through innovative outreach efforts. In 1913, the university established study centers to serve teachers on a statewide basis – the first initiative of its kind in the country. While delivery methods have changed, the commitment to provide Iowans access to high-quality educational opportunities that fall outside traditional campus offerings has remained a core part of our mission.

The Office of Continuing and Distance Education provides leadership and support in delivering high-quality, nontraditional academic offerings that increase access to educational opportunities. Degree programs and courses are offered in a variety of formats, including online, off-campus and blended delivery. Through these efforts, UNI connects with residents in more than 500 Iowa cities and towns and generates in excess of 14,000 enrollments annually.

On June 30, I started my position as director of Admissions at UNI. From the moment I arrived on campus, I was welcomed in such a warm and supportive way. This is the same feeling our new students experience when they arrive on campus.

I am looking forward to my first year at UNI and am proud to lead a team of outstanding individuals in the Office of Admissions. We have put many new initiatives in place to ensure that more and more qualified students know what we are about. We have seen an increase in the number of visitors, and we are on pace to surpass last year’s new incoming freshmen total. We are busy planning for the 2016–17 recruitment cycle and have already communicated with a large number of high school juniors and have seen the number of “class of 2017” inquiries increase over previous years. It is an exciting time to be a Panther!

There are a lot of things to be proud of heading into this recruitment season. UNI has once again been ranked as the No. 2 Regional University in the Midwest by U.S. News & World Report’s “America’s Best Colleges.” UNI was also rated one of the 50 safest colleges in the U.S., according to a study done by Newsweek Daily Beast.

Our Panther Open House events have kicked off for 2016–17 and we are seeing a large number of visitors to campus. Open house and daily campus visit attendance is on track to surpass previous totals. You can follow these events through social media and see the positive feedback your institution receives from the next class of outstanding students. Feel free to add your own memories to share with prospective students as well.

In closing, many alumni ask me how they can help with recruitment efforts. The easiest way is to simply showcase your UNI Pride. Keep spreading the word regarding everything that happens on a daily basis throughout campus and the community. If you know of a student that is in the process of their college search, encourage them to sign up for a campus visit and apply early. We have tours Monday through Friday, on select Saturdays and open house events.

Go Panthers!

The UNI Foundation’s Focus on Students Scholarship Initiative campaign exceeded its goal of $40 million. In just three years and five months of a five-year campaign, $41,293,158 was raised! The initiative was launched to increase the number of endowed scholarships for current and future students and to help ensure that qualified students are not prohibited from enrolling in or graduating from UNI due to financial hardships.

The entire campus community owes a debt of gratitude to the donors who helped us exceed our fundraising goal. Without their generous contributions and their commitment to supporting the students of UNI, this would not have been possible.
If you’ve ever flipped the television to HGTV, chances are you’ve at least caught a glimpse of “Tiny House, Big Living,” the network’s reality television show about the unique real estate trend that is sweeping the nation.

For people wanting to downsize their square footage, mortgage payment and environmental footprint, tiny houses have become the popular solution.

For Scott Greenhalgh, an assistant professor of technology at UNI, the tiny house had an entirely different appeal altogether. For him, it represented an innovative and educational project for 14 technology and engineering education students. And thus began the design and construction of UNI’s very first tiny house.

“I was a little uncertain that the project may demand too much from the students,” said Greenhalgh, considering the scope of the project. “But I believe it allowed them to come together and work as a team on a project.
The tiny house covers 148 square feet and is composed largely of recycled materials. The technology and engineering students worked alongside interior design students for six hours a week in one semester to maximize the small space, design solutions to put multiple functions for each space and improve the efficiency of the home.

Now that the tiny house has been completed, the plan is to sell the home to a group that will use it to address homelessness in the Cedar Valley.

“My hope for students in the program is for them to feel they are challenged in new and different ways to discover capabilities they did not know they had.”
While Jim Wohlpart isn’t necessarily a new face to UNI, he is new to the interim president position. Before moving into this role, Wohlpart was UNI’s provost and executive vice president for academic affairs. He came to UNI in 2015 from Florida Gulf Coast University where he was the dean of Undergraduate Studies and a professor of English. Wohlpart replaces Bill Ruud, who left UNI to be president at Marietta College in Marietta, Ohio.

"I am honored to be selected as the interim president of the University of Northern Iowa and want to thank President Ruud for his leadership over the past three years," said Wohlpart. "The university has a great deal of momentum right now with strong support from the Board of Regents, the Legislature, the governor and community partners. I am eager to work with faculty and staff to continue that momentum and elevate the great work we do with preparing students for academic and professional success and for meaningful engagement with their communities."
Gwenne Berry also isn’t new to UNI. Before fulfilling the role of UNI’s first chief diversity officer, she was the associate director of compliance and equity management.

“I know it sounds clichéd, but the first thing I’m going to do is listen,” said Berry. “I need to hear from students, faculty, staff and our community. I need to hear from alums and parents. I need to know where we’re succeeding and where we need some work.

“The University of Northern Iowa could – and should – be a leader when it comes to diversity and inclusion. We have allies on our campus, in our community and among our alums. I’m excited about engaging all of those constituents in making sure the university gets it right.”

Gaëtane Jean-Marie was named dean of the College of Education at the beginning of the spring semester and assumed her new duties on June 30. Before coming to UNI she was a professor and chair of the Department of Educational Leadership, Evaluation and Organizational Development at the University of Louisville in Kentucky.

“Liking UNI meant saying yes to living in the cold. But, I was drawn to the vision and momentum of the university and College of Education during my campus visit,” said Jean-Marie. “When I went home to Kentucky, I couldn’t stop talking about UNI. I was really excited about the work that was underway and the vision by administration and others. The momentum was energizing, and I wanted to be a part of that so I can make a contribution.”

Every year, UNI’s student body elects a new Northern Iowa Student Government (NISG). The 2016-17 president is Hunter Flesch, a junior majoring in elementary education and middle level education, and the vice president is Avery Johnson, a junior majoring in English.

Both students will work closely with other NISG officials, UNI administrators, students, faculty and staff to promote and advocate for activities that are in the best interest of the student body.
